Length, from N. to S., 240 miles. Area, 13,400 sq. m., exclusive of a number of islets that belong to it. Formosa is traversed by several ranges of slaty and schistose mountains, which are mainly of Tertiary age, and culminate in Mount Morrison (officially known as Nitaka-Yama, the "new high mountain"), 13,595 feet; another lofty summit is Mount Sylvia (Setusan, the "snow-mountain"), 11,230 ft. A volcanic chain with active and extinct cones is found in the N. Along the W. coast stretches a broad alluvial plain. There are only two streams, one in North Taiwan and the other in South Taiwan, that are serviceable for navigation, and both are known as Tamsui-kei ("fresh-water rivers"). The soil of the lower tracts and the more gentle slopes of the mountains is extremely fertile and well cultivated, and the climate is salubrious. Hot springs are numerous, and sulphur and petroleum exist in large quantities. There are vast deposits of coal, and it is in great part of good quality, and largely worked in the region between Kelung and Tamsui. Wheat, rice of superior quality, millet, maize, tea, sugar-cane, yams, sweet potatoes, indigo, peanuts, araca-nuts, hemp, jute, and a variety of fruits and vegetables are among the cultivated products. The exports include tea, sugar, rice, camphor, camphor-oil, bamboos, coal, sulphur, hemp, jute, fruits, timber, etc., the main industries being the cultivation of tea and sugar-cane and the extraction of camphor and sulphur. The domestic animals are cattle, the buffalo, horse, ass, goat, sheep, and hog. The population consists mainly of a number of tribes and clans supposed to be of Malayan stock, of an aboriginal people whose ethnic affinities have not been established, and of descendants of Chinese settlers (Hoklos and Hakkas). Chinese is spoken or understood by large numbers of the non-Chinese inhabitants. The chief ports include Tamsui, Kelung, Tainan, Takow, and Anping. The Dutch exercised sovereignty over part of Formosa during a portion of the seventeenth century. The island was ceded by China to Japan in 1895. Under Japanese rule the construction of railways has been vigorously prosecuted. The population, exclusive of the wild tribes of the interior mountains, was, in 1900, 2,729,965 (including 52,495 in the dependent Pescadore Islands), of which number 32,000 were Japanese.

Fox Island, a small island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, near the NE. extremity of the Saguenay coast.

Fox Island, in Lake Michigan, belongs to Manitou co., Mich.

Fox Islands, a name of the Aleutian Islands generally, and specifically of the easternmost group of these islands (Unimak, Unalaska, and Umnak, and their associated islets).

Fox Lake, a post-hamlet of Lake co., Ill., about 48 miles NNW. of Chicago.

Foxlake, a post-hamlet of Martin co., Minn.

Foxlake, a banking post-village of Dodge co., Wis., near a lake of the same name, and on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 15 miles NW. of Juneau. It has cheese-factories, etc. Pop. in 1900, 890.

Foxlake, a township (town) of Dodge co., Wis. Pop. in 1900, 741.

Fox Land is a part of Baffin Land, Arctic America, extending E. into Fox Channel.

Foxridge, a post-village of Cayuga co., N.Y. Pop. 100.

Fox River rises in Davis co., Iowa, and enters the Mississippi River 2 miles below Alexandria. It is about 100 miles long.

Fox (or Pischta/ka) River rises in Waukesha co., Wis., passes into Illinois and enters the Illinois River at Ottawa. Its length is estimated at 220 miles. The chief towns on its banks are Aurora, Ottawa, and Elgin.

Fox River (called Nee'mah by the aborigines) rises in Wisconsin, near the S. boundary of Green Lake co., and flows westward to Portage, which is on the Wisconsin River. At this place the Fox and Wisconsin rivers are only  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles apart and are connected by a canal. The Fox River runs thence northward into Marquette co. and expands into Lake Pacawa, from which it runs northeastward and after a very tortuous course enters Lake Winnebago at Oshkosh, on the W. side of the lake. It issues from the northern end of the lake, flowing northeastward through Brown co., and enters Green Bay at the city of Green Bay. Its length is estimated at 250 miles. It is an important channel of trade and forms a part of the navigable waters by which steamboats can pass from the Mississippi River into Lake Michigan. The largest towns on this stream are Oshkosh, Appleton, Green Bay, and Portage.

Fox River, GREAT and LITTLE, two rivers of Canada, within 2 miles of each other, and both falling into the Gulf of St. Lawrence between Griffith's Cove and Little Vallée.

Foxriver, a post-hamlet of Kenosha co., Wis., on the Fox River, 20 miles by rail W. of Kenosha.

Fox River, a post-village of Gaspé co., Quebec, on the shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, at the mouth of the Great Fox River, 18 miles N. of Gaspé. Pop. about 150.

Fox River, a small village of Cumberland co., Nova Scotia, 3 miles from Port Greville.

Fox's Channel, Arctic America. See FOX CHANNEL.

Foxspring, a post-hamlet of Clay co., Tenn.

Foxton, a post-town of New Zealand, in the SW. part of North Island, on the river Manawatu, 4 miles from the sea. It has extensive flax-mills, etc. Pop. of the borough, about 1200.

Foxtrap, a post-hamlet of Noxubee co., Miss.

Foxvale, a post-hamlet of Norfolk co., Mass.

Fox Valley, a post-hamlet of Linn co., Oregon, 20 miles S.E. of Turner station.

Foxville, a post-village of Frederick co., Md. The banking point is Thurmont.

Foyers, pronounced and sometimes written Fyers, f'yers, a small river of Scotland, joins Loch Ness 8 miles N.E. of Fort Augustus. It is noted for its fine cascades.

Foyle, a river of Ireland, formed by the confluence of the Finn and Mourne at Lifford, on the E. border of co. Donegal, flows N. and expands into Lough Foyle.

Foyle, Lough, lōh foil, on the N. coast of Ireland, is a large arm of the sea, forming the estuary of the river Foyle. Length, 18 miles; breadth, 9 miles.

Foyns Land (Island), in Antarctica, is S. of Fuegia, off the coast of Graham Land (Island).

Foz, foth, a small town of Spain, 42 miles NNE. of Lugo, on a bay of the Atlantic Ocean.

Foz, fos, a village of Portugal, in Alemitejo, on the Tagus, 27 miles NE. of Lisbon.

Frackville, a post-borough of Schuylkill co., Pa., on the Philadelphia and Reading and the Pennsylvania Rrs., 12 miles N. of Pottsville. Coal is extensively mined in the vicinity. Pop. in 1900, 2594. The banking point is Pottsville.

Frades, frâ'dësh, a small island of Brasil, province of Bahia, in All Saints' Bay, 25 miles NW. of Bahia.

Frades, frâ'dês, a village of Spain, 22 miles S. of Salamanca, with mineral springs.

Fraga, frâ'gâ, a town of Spain, 55 miles SE. of Huesca, on the Cinca. Its environs are noted for excellent figs and pomegranates. Pop. in 1900, 6899.

Fragueto, frân-yâ'to (FRAGNETTO MONFORTE, frân-yâ'to mon-for'tâ, and FRAGNETTO L'ABATE, frân-yâ'to lâ-bâ'tâ), two contiguous villages of Italy, province of Avellino, and respectively 17 and 18 miles WNW. of Ariano.

Fragua, frâ'gwâ, a river of Colombia, rises on the SE. slope of the Sierra de Pardo, and, after a SE. course of about 180 miles, joins the Japurâ.

Frailes, frî'lês, a small town of Spain, province of Jaén, 5 miles E. of Alcalá-la-Real.

Frailey, frâ'le, a township of Schuylkill co., Pa. Pop. in 1900, 933.

Frain, or Frayn, frîne (Slavic, Wranow, vrâ'nov), a small town of Moravia, 11 miles WNW. of Znaim, on the Thaya.

Fraipont, frâ'pōw', a village of Belgium, province and 9 miles SE. of Liège.

Fraisans, frâ'zōw', a village of France, department of Jura, on the Doubs, 14 miles from Dôle.

Fraize, frâz, a village of France, in Vosges, 32 miles E. of Épinal.

Framerier, frâ'meh-rec', a commune of Belgium, in Hainaut, arrondissement of Mons. It has coal-mines. Pop. in 1900, 11,666.

Framersbach, frâm'mers-bâk', a town of Bavaria, in Lower Franconia, 28 miles NW. of Würzburg. Pop. 2000.

Framingham, a post-village and township (town) of Middlesex co., Mass., on the Sudbury River and on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 24 miles W. by S. of Boston. The town has manufactures of boots and shoes, rubber- and straw-goods, cloth, yarns, etc. Pop. in 1900, 11,302; of the village, about 1350. A state normal school is located here. The banking point is South Framingham.

Framlingham, a town of England, co. of Suffolk, 15 miles NNE. of Ipswich. It has a fine old church and the ruins of a magnificent castle. Pop. in 1901, 2526.

Frampton, a post-village of Licking co., Ohio. The banking point is Newark. Pop. about 200.

Frampton, or Saint Édouard, sânt ed'ward', a post-village of Dorchester co., Quebec, 36 miles S. of Quebec.

Français (frân'sâ'), Cape, the N. point of Kerguelen Island.

Francavilla, frân-kâ-vil'â, a town of Italy, province of Lecce, 20 miles ENE. of Taranto. It has manufactures of leather, textiles, etc. Pop. in 1901, 16,772 (commune, 20,422).

Francavilla, a town of Italy, in Potenza, 25 miles E. of Lagonegro. Pop. about 1600 (commune, 3000).

Francavilla, a commune (and village) of Italy, province of Chieti, on the Adriatic Sea, 7 miles NE. of Chieti. Pop. in 1901, 5671.

Francavilla, a village of Italy, province of Cosenza, 44 miles NE. of Cassano.

Francavilla, a town of Italy, province of Catanzaro, 13 miles SSW. of Nicastro. Pop. about 1500.

Francavilla, a town of Sicily, 10 miles WNW. of Taormina. Pop. in 1901, 5505.

France (L. Gal'lia, later Fran'cia; Fr. France, frân's; It. Francia, frân'shâ; Sp. Francia, frân'the-â; Ger.

Frankreich, frânk'rîx), a republic, constituting the most western portion of central Europe, lying between lat. 42° 20' and 51° 5' N. and lon. 4° 48' W. and 7° 39' E. It is bounded N. by the English Channel, the Strait of Dover, and Belgium; W. by the Atlantic Ocean; S. by Spain and the Mediterranean Sea; E. by Italy, Switzerland, and the German Empire; and NE. by the German Empire, Luxemburg, and Belgium. The outline of the country is that of a pentagon, with a prominent projection formed by the peninsula of Brittany. Area, 203,687 sq. m., exclusive of Corsica (3366 sq. m.), which is 115 miles distant at its nearest point. The coast-line—consisting largely of chalk cliffs in the N., of beetling heights in Brittany, of extremely flat reaches in the SW. (the Landes), and of lagoons (étangs), lagoon-lands, and mountains in the SE.—has a length of about 1800 miles, of which 800 fall upon the Bay of Biscay, 650 upon the English Channel, and 350 upon the Mediterranean (Gulf of Lyons).

Relief of the Land.—The surface features of France are very varied. The greater part of the land lying NW. of a line joining Navarre on the SW. with Luxemburg on the NE. is maritime lowland, rising but little above sea-level, or depressed interior basin (Paris Basin) and eroded plateau, the occupancy of which by the sea in a comparatively late geological period is well attested by the evidence of organic remains. Few points in this region exceed 600 feet in height, and only one (in the hills of Normandy) surpasses 1300 ft. The south-central part of France is occupied by what is frequently known as the Central Plateau, a height of land which has plateau characteristics on its western side, but eastward passes off into abrupt and rugged mountains, known in their different parts as the Cévennes, the mountains of Vivarais, of Beaujolais, of Charolais, the Côte d'Or, etc., which fall off into the depressions of the Rhone and Saône. The loftiest summit of the Cévennes is Mont Mézenc, 5750 ft. The Cévennes range is continued northward to an elevated plateau called the Plateau de Langres. Forming an integral part of the Central Plateau—which is geologically, perhaps, the most ancient part of France—is the volcanic country of Auvergne, with its vast lava-fields, volcanic knobs and bosses, and still beautifully preserved craters and hot springs. This region of recently extinguished volcanic fires is scenically one of the most distinctive of France,—indeed, of the whole of Europe. Of its better-known summits are the Pay-de-Dôme, Puy-de-Sancy (of the Mont Dore group), and the Plomb de Cantal, the last-named being the loftiest, 6093 ft. (See AUVERGNE.) The remaining mountains of France are the forested Ardennes, on the borders of Belgium; the Vosges, forming part of the boundary with Germany; the Jura, on the Swiss frontier (with the highest summit of the entire system, the Crêt de la Neige); the Alps, which occupy nearly the whole of the country lying S. and E. of the valley of the Rhone, and whose divisions, known as the Pennine, Graian, Cottian, and Maritime Alps, form the boundary with Italy; and the Pyrenees, which form the entire boundary with Spain. France shares with Italy in the possession of the highest summit of the Alps, Mont Blanc, 15,782 ft. Other lofty summits of the Alps lying within France are Monte Viso, Mont Iséran, and Mont Pelvoux. Although the culminating point of the Pyrenees lies within the Spanish borders, summits scarcely less high (Pic de Vignemale, 10,792 ft.) belong to France, in which is also centred the grandest scenery of the entire mountain-system, the upper valley of the Gavarnie. See ALPS, PYRENEES, JURA, etc.

Rivers, Lakes.—None of the rivers of France are of the first magnitude and but few are navigable, except for minor craft, for long distances. The chief streams are the Loire, the longest, with a length of some 600 miles; Rhone (whose principal affluent is the Saône, Seine (which receives the Marne and Oise), Garonne (with the Dordogne tributary to the important tide-water estuary, the Gironde), Meuse, and Moselle, the last two belonging to the basin of the Rhine. The five river-basins represented by these waters effect the drainage of the great bulk of the country, which in the main is directed northwestward, or along the line of broad slope of the land. The Rhone is the only stream of consequence whose course is directed to the Mediterranean. Most of the streams of France, owing to marked fluctuations in water-level and to intercepting rapids, are made available for navigation only through the aid of canalized arms or channels. Among the rivers, in addition to those mentioned above, are the Somme, Orne, Vilaine, Sarthe, Mayenne, Loir, Allier, Vienne, Tarn, Lot, Isère, Durance, Charente, Adour, Aude, Hérault, Var, Aisne, Yonne, and Eure. The Loire gives water communication through the centre of France to Rouanne, 450 miles from its mouth; the Seine to Rouen for vessels of 300 tons, and for such as draw no more than 6 feet, to Paris, 110 miles inland in a direct line; the Rhone for good-sized vessels to Lyons, 218 miles from Marseilles; and the Garonne to Toulouse, and for small craft to Castres, 260 miles from its embouchure. The lakes of France are few in number and of small size, the largest (not reckoning Lake Geneva, on the border) being the semi-Alpine lakes Annecy and Bourget, both lying E. of the valley of the Rhone. Numerous lagoons are scattered through the tide-water lowlands of the Mediterranean and Biscay coasts, in a region of retreating seas and strong sedimentation.

Climate, Products.—Taken as a whole, the climate of France is one of the finest in Europe, though, from the extent of the country and the diversity of conditions in different localities, considerable variations occur. Thus, the climate of the northeast is continental, while that of the northwest is oceanic, resembling the climate of Great Britain. The Mediterranean districts, again, are affected by the burning winds of Africa, the mistral often proving very destructive to vegetation around the mouths of the Rhone and Var. S. of lat. 46° there are about 134 rainy days in the year; N. of this parallel, 120. The mean annual rainfall for the whole of France is 29½ inches, ranging from a minimum of 19 inches to 71 inches in the western Pyrenees. At Toulon the mean annual temperature is 62° Fahr.; at Marseilles, 59.5°; at Bordeaux, 56°; at Nantes, 55°; at Paris, 51°; at Dunkirk, 50.5°. Most exceptional extremes of -18° and 104° have been noted at Paris.

A popular climatic division of France is into districts in accordance with the characteristic vegetable product of each. The southernmost district, that bordering on the Mediterranean, has been called the olive region. The second, whose northern limit is a line drawn in a N.E. direction from the department of Gironde to the Vosges, has maize as its characteristic product. The third reaches to a line drawn from the mouth of the Loire to the town of Mézières in Ardennes, and is the extreme northern limit of the profitable cultivation of the vine. All beyond this constitutes the fourth region, of which wheat may be regarded as the staple.

Natural and planted forests cover nearly one-seventh of France, the principal localities being the Ardennes, the Vosges, the Plateau de Langres, the Jura range, and the Cévennes. Along the Bay of Biscay a forest of sea-pine has been formed, extending over a length of 100 miles. The oak, elm, beech, and pine are the prevailing trees. Of perhaps more importance than any other, on account of the great national industry with which it is associated, is the silkmulberry. The olive is a southern product, as well as the orange, lemon, almond, fig, pistachio, and asper. The date and eucalyptus are among the introduced shade and ornamental trees of the French Riviera. The apple, pear, plum, and cherry are the leading fruit trees N. of the vine region.

A peculiar economic feature of French agriculture is the excessive subdivision of the soil, as a result in great part of the prevailing law of inheritance. The cereal crop is by far the most important. France is next to Russia the greatest wheat-producing country of Europe, the product being about half of that of the United States. Potatoes are largely cultivated, as also beets for sugar. Hemp, flax, rape, hops, and tobacco are also among the products. But in the grape district the most important industry is the cultivation of the vine. In this department of husbandry France is unsurpassed, the various high-class wines it produces, under the names of Champagne, Burgundy, Bordeaux, etc., having the highest repute. The area of land under vine cultivation was, in 1900, 1,730,451 hectares (the hectare being equal to 2.47 acres), which gave a wine product of 67,353,000 hectolitres (the hectolitre being equal to about 22 gallons). In some districts the chestnut forms a considerable part of the food of the people. The northern part of France produces excellent cider and perry. The annual product of raw silk is between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 pounds. It was much greater formerly. Considerable areas of France, consisting of moors, naked limestones, swamps and marshes, are wholly unproductive or true waste-lands, and it is thought that they make up hardly less than one-seventh of the full area of the land.

The fauna of the greater part of France is essentially west European, differing little from the fauna of the bordering countries and having few marked elements that are distinctive of it. Few of the larger mammalian types, such as the wolf, bear, and boar, are now to be met with beyond the forested mountain-fastnesses—the Ardennes, Vosges, Cévennes, and Pyrenees more particularly—or the game-preserves; but in inaccessible regions these animals are still abundant and the ravages committed by wolves are still considerable. The chamois and ibex belong to the lofty Alpine regions.

Mines.—France is a great coal-producing country. The coal-fields are found in nearly half of the departments. The most important are those of Valenciennes, in the department of Nord, and Saint-Étienne, in that of Loire. The output is insufficient for the needs of the country, so that a large import takes place every year from England and Belgium. The total coal product in 1900 was 46,543,700 tons, of which about 1,200,000 tons were exported. The imports of coal during the same year amounted to 14,599,950 tons. Iron is obtained from most of the coal-fields and from beds in other departments; also from seams in the mountain-limestone of the Jura and from the crystalline rocks of the Alps, Pyrenees, and Vosges. The number of mines worked is about 350, and the quantity of iron produced in 1900 was about 2,700,000 tons. Copper, lead, zinc, manganese, and antimony are also mined, but the product is not very large. France abounds in marbles and building-sandstone (Fontainebleau sandstone) and in excellent gypsum ("plaster of Paris"). A fine lithographic stone is found in the department of Gard. Excellent millstones are obtained in several localities, the best being from La-Ferté-sous-Jouras.

Manufactures.—Owing to the minute subdivision of the land, the agricultural population greatly outnumbers the manufacturing, so that France cannot with propriety be called a manufacturing country. The manufacture of textiles is by far the most important industry. Woollen, silk, cotton, and linen fabrics are all produced on a vast scale. Among the principal seats of the textile industry are Lyons (unrivalled for its silks), Rouen, Lille, Roubaix, Paris, Rheims, Amiens, Elbeuf, Tourcoing, Cambrai, Valenciennes, and Saint-Étienne (ribbons). Far-famed are the tapestries and carpets of Paris, Aubusson, and Beauvais and the porcelain and glass of Sévres, Paris, and Limoges. The manufacture of lace is extensively carried on, especially in some of the northern departments. France occupies a prominent place in the manufacture of iron and steel products, the principal seats of which are in the north and east. The steel-works of Le Creusot are among the largest in Europe. Saint-Étienne is the chief centre of the manufacture of fire-arms. Other manufactures are beet-sugar, leather, paper, chemicals, musical instruments, hats, gloves, hosiery, brass- and zinc-ware, plate- and flint-glass, confectionery, and tobacco. The French especially excel in the manufacture of articles calling for taste, ingenuity, and delicate manipulation. Many industries of this description, such as the manufacture of gold- and silver-ware and jewellery, have their chief seat in the capital. Among other products may be noted Gobelins tapestry, costly shawls, articles of vertu, clocks, watches, philosophical and surgical instruments, furniture, carriages, and works in ivory. Besides what is used for home consumption, France exports enormous quantities of wine and brandy, the most famous brand of the latter being that produced at Cognac.

The principal commercial ports of France are Marseilles, Havre, Bordeaux, Dunkirk, Cette, Rouen, Boulogne, Saint-Nazaire, and Calais. The leading items of export are textiles and materials that go into the making of textiles, wine and brandy, leather and leather goods, articles of apparel, skins and furs, chemicals, and manufactures of iron and steel. Great Britain takes the largest share of the French exports. About an equal amount goes to Belgium, Germany, and the United States, combined. The merchant navy consisted in 1901 of 14,393 sailing-vessels and 1299 steamers; 13,693 vessels and steamers, the greater number of which were engaged in the coastwise trade, were of a tonnage not exceeding 50 tons. The railway system of France dates from the year 1830, when there were 24 miles of road. At the beginning of 1904 the mileage exceeded 23,000. The railways are almost entirely in the hands of six great companies. On Jan. 1, 1901, there were 87,382 miles of telegraph lines, comprising 328,700 miles of wire.

The canals of France are numerous, the object being to connect all the great water-basins and thereby give a continuous water-communication through the interior and from sea to sea. Thus the Canal du Midi, or Canal of Languedoc, starting from a point in the Garonne a little below Toulouse, runs ESE. into the Étang de Thau, completing a navigable communication between the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean. The Canal du Centre, or of Charolais, the Rhone and Rhine Canal, and the Canal of Burgundy, pierce the barriers which isolated the basins of the Rhone, Loire, Seine, and Rhine, and give access from any one of these rivers to the other three. The Eastern Canal and the Marne-Saône canals unite Franche-Comté with Champagne and Flanders. A canal measuring 230 miles unites Nantes and Brest. France possesses canals having an aggregate length of 3000 miles. The rivers of France are navigable for the aggregate length of 5300 miles.

Government.—Previous to the revolution of 1789, the government of France was a despotism. Since then it has changed its form of government more frequently than any other country in the world. The legislative power is vested in an assembly of 2 houses,—the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate,—and the executive in a president. The Chamber of Deputies is elected by direct universal suffrage, the arrondissements (in some cases parts of arrondissements) constituting the electoral districts. There are at present 591 members; the term of office is 4 years. The Senate is composed of 300 members, chosen by indirect election, the term of office being 9 years. There are still a few life senators, who entered the body previous to the amendment of the constitution in 1884. The colonies are represented in the chambers. The Senate has conjointly with the Chamber of Deputies the right of initiating and framing laws, but financial measures must be first presented to and voted by the Chamber of Deputies. The president of the republic is elected by a majority of votes by the Senate and Chamber of Deputies united in a National Assembly. His term of office is 7 years. He has the initiative of legislation concurrently with the two chambers, promulgates laws enacted by them, has the right of pardon, disposes of the military force, appoints to all civil and military posts, including the heads of the ministerial departments, and may, with the assent of the Senate, dissolve the Chamber of Deputies before the legal expiration of its term. The seat of government is Paris.

Communal and Departmental Administration.—The commune represents the elementary territorial unit. It comprises either a town (in the case of large places, part of a town) or one or more villages, with the adjacent rural districts, and is governed by a mayor (maire), appointed by the government, and a municipal council, elected by the inhabitants. Paris and Lyons have special municipal administrations.

The canton, the next higher unit, consists in most cases of 12 communes. It is not so much an administrative as a judicial division. Recruiting for the army takes place at the capital of the canton. The arrondissement, the main subdivision of the chief territorial division, the department, is usually composed of 8 cantons. It is governed by a sub-prefect, appointed by the president of the republic. He is assisted by a council consisting of as many members as there are cantons in the arrondissement. The department comprises generally 4 arrondissements. It is governed by a prefect, who is appointed by the president, and is assisted by a council composed of as many members as there are cantons.

Religion.—All religions are equal before the law. Roman Catholics, Protestants, and Jews (and in Algeria the Mohammedans) have state allowances. All but about 2 per cent. of the population are Roman Catholics or profess no religion. The Protestants number less than 1,000,000 and the Jews about 50,000. The great bulk of the Protestants are Calvinists.

Education.—Nearly half the expenses connected with public instruction are defrayed by the state, and the remainder by the departments. Schools are divided into 3 classes,—primary schools, secondary schools, and colleges and universities devoted to the higher instruction. Primary education is administered by the commune. Above the primary schools come the secondary schools, in which classical or industrial education is given. In the higher education, 15 universities now take the place of the corps of faculties. These are: the universities of Aix-Marseille, Besançon, Bordeaux, Caen, Clermont-Ferrand, Dijon, Grenoble, Lille, Lyons, Montpellier, Nancy, Paris, Poitiers, Rennes, and Toulouse. There are free faculties supported by the church in a few of the principal cities. Among the famous institutions located in Paris are the Collège de France, the École Pratique des Hautes Études à la Sorbonne, the École Normale Supérieure, the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers (applied sciences), the Museum of Natural History, the Polytechnic School for officers and state engineers, the Central School of Arts and Manufactures, the École des Ponts et Chaussées (for civil engineers), the School of Fine Arts, the Conservatoire for musicians and actors, the School of Mines, and the school for living Oriental languages. National military schools are those of Paris, La Flèche, Saint-Cyr, Fontainebleau, Versailles, Saumur, and Saint-Maixent. The Bibliothèque Nationale is the largest library in the world. The French Academy, constituting a section of the Institute of France, is the most famous of all learned bodies.

Army and Navy.—The effective force, in peace standing, of the active army in 1903 was in France proper 513,998 men, besides 54,774 men in Algeria and 18,514 in Tunis. This is inclusive of the Gendarmerie (22,359) and the Garde Républicaine (3076). The number of men liable for active war service is estimated to be 2,350,000, besides the territorial army of 900,000 men. The first-class forts and fortifications are: Paris, Belfort, Verdun, Briançon, Lille, Dunkirk, Arras, Douai, Lyons, Grenoble, Besançon, Toulon, Perpignan, Bayonne, Rochefort, Lorient, Brest, and Cherbourg. Paris is the greatest fortress in the world. The war navy (battle-ships, cruisers, torpedo-boats, destroyers, submarines) of France consists of about 350 vessels.

Colonies and Dependencies.—France stands next to Great Britain in the extent of her colonial possessions, but the area and population are both very much less. The island of Corsica is treated as an integral part of France. The colonies are: In Africa, Algeria (and the Algerian Sahara), Tunis (protectorate), Senegal (Senegambia, with the French Niger territory), French Guinea, the Ivory Coast, Dahomey (and dependencies), French Congo, and the French Somali coast; in Asia, Chandernagor, Karikal, Pondicherry, Mahé, Yanaon (these five in India), French Cochinchina, Cambodia, Annam, Laos, Tongking; in the South Sea, New Caledonia (with the Loyalty and Chesterfield islands), the Marquesas, Paumotu (Tuamotu) or Low Archipelago, Gambier Islands, Clipperton, and other islands; in the Indian Ocean, Madagascar, Réunion, Nossi-Bé, Mayotte, the Comoro Isles (protectorate), etc.; New Amsterdam and the Kerguelen Islands; and in America, French Guiana, the islands of Martinique, Guadeloupe, St. Bartholomew, Marie Galante, etc., in the West Indies, and the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon, south of Newfoundland.

Population.—According to the census of 1901, the population of France was 38,961,945, an increase of only 618,753 over the population of 1891 (38,343,192). The natural rate of increase of the population in France is lower than that of any other nation in western Europe. The rural portion constitutes about 70 per cent. of the population. The departments of France are the following:

Ain.	Eure-et-Loir.	Marne.
Alène.	Finistère.	Mayenne.
Allier.	Gard.	Meurthe-et-Moselle.
Alpes-Maritimes.	Gers.	Meuse.

The division of France into departments dates from 1790. Previous to the Revolution the country was divided into governments and provinces, the names of which still survive. These old divisions are: In the NW., Normandy, Maine, and Perche; in the N., Ile de France, Picardy, Artois, French Flanders, and Champagne (with Brie); in the NE., Lorraine; in the E., Burgundy, Franche-Comté, and Lyonnais; in the SE., Dauphiné and Provence; in the S., Languedoc, Roussillon, and Foix; in the SW., Gascony, Béarn, French Navarre, and Guienne; in the W., Anjou, Saintonge, Angoumois, Poitou, Anjou, and Brittany; in the centre, Touraine, Orléanais, Nivernais, Berry, Bourbonnais, Auvergne, Limousin, and Marche.

History.—France was known in ancient times as Gaul (Gallia), the country of the Gauls. In a broader sense Gaul embraced also a large part of northern Italy, Belgium, and part of Holland and Switzerland. The portion now included in Italy was called Gallia Cisalpina, or "Gaul on this side of the Alps," the bulk of Gaul being called Gallia Transalpina, or "Gaul beyond the Alps." The Romans established themselves in the southeastern part of Transalpine Gaul in 125-121 B.C. In 58-51 B.C. the country was subjugated by Cæsar. He found it inhabited by three races—the Aquitanians in the southwest, the Celts in the west, centre, and east, and the Belgians in the north and northeast. In the fifth century it fell completely into the power of the Visigoths, Burgundians, and Franks. Clovis, the king of the Franks, put an end to the last vestige of Roman dominion in 486, was baptised in 496, and in 507-08 stripped the Visigoths of most of their Gallic territories, thus extending the sway of the Franks to the Pyrenees. In 534 the Franks subdued the Burgundians. Under Charlemagne (768-814) the Frankish realm attained great magnitude, embracing, in addition to modern France, a large part of what is now Germany and Cisleithan Austria, as well as Italy (except the south), Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, and the northeast corner of Spain. This vast realm was partitioned among the grandsons of Charlemagne in 843. The monarchy of the western Franks became the kingdom of France. Under the descendants of Charlemagne the position of the king was soon reduced to that of an overlord, whose great vassals, the feudal dukes and counts, became the hereditary heads of autonomous states, the power of some of the vassals surpassing that of the king. Among the chief feudatory states were the county of Flanders (which finally cut loose from the French monarchy), the county of Vermandois (capital, Saint-Quentin), the duchy of France (capital, Paris), the county of Champagne, the duchy of Burgundy, the county (later duchy) of Anjou, the duchy of Aquitaine, the county of Toulouse, and the duchy of Normandy (founded by the Normen about 911). The Carolingian dynasty, under which France became thus split up, was succeeded in 987 by that of the Capetians, under whom the royal authority was gradually, in a great measure, re-established. In 1066, William of Normandy conquered England, and when, in 1154, Henry Plantagenet ascended the English throne the western half of France, with the exception of Brittany (which was an independent state), was united with the English crown. In 1202-05, however, Normandy, Maine, Poitou, Anjou, and Touraine were wrested from England. In 1271, Languedoc, which had been ruled by the powerful counts of Toulouse, was reunited with the French crown. Champagne soon followed, and Dauphiné was acquired in 1349. In 1328 the Capetian dynasty was succeeded by the house of Valois. In the course of the first hundred years of the reign of this dynasty, the English made themselves masters of a great part of France and the French monarchy was brought to the brink of dissolution, but finally the tide of English conquest was arrested and, by the middle of the fifteenth century, the French were once more in possession of their country. During this period Burgundy, ruled by a branch of the house of Valois, had developed into a great power, ruling the Netherlands. Louis XI. (under whom the royal authority in France became supreme) in 1477 seized the duchy of Burgundy (detached from the Netherlands), reunited Anjou with the French crown in 1480, and annexed Provence in 1481. In 1491, Brittany was united with France. The bishoprics of Metz, Toul, and Verdun were wrested from the German Empire and annexed to France in 1552.

In 1589 the house of Bourbon succeeded to that of Valois. With its accession Béarn became part of the French kingdom. About half a century later Artois, Roussillon, and a great part of Alsace were annexed. Soon after, French Flanders and Franche-Comté were conquered by Louis XIV., who also took possession of Strassburg. The year 1763 marks the downfall of France as a great colonial power, Canada and Louisiana being relinquished by her as the result of the Seven Years' War. Louisiana was recovered in 1800, but in 1803 it was sold to the United States. Lorraine became part of France in 1766, and in 1768 the island of Corsica was acquired from Genoa. In 1789 the abuses which had grown up under the despotic rule of the Bourbons brought about the Revolution and, in 1792, France became a republic. In 1790 the old division into provinces gave way to that into departments. In 1791, Avignon and Venaissin, which had belonged to the Papacy, were annexed to France. Between 1792 and 1801, Belgium, Holland, Savoy, a great part of Italy, Switzerland, and the German territories W. of the Rhine were brought under the sway or influence of republican France. Napoleon established the empire in 1804 and in the succeeding years tore away a large part of Austria and Prussia, broke up the German Empire, established the kingdom of Westphalia, took possession of Naples and the Papal States, and nearly achieved the conquest of the Spanish peninsula. With the downfall of Napoleon in 1814-15, France shrank back into her former limits. The Bourbons again ruled the country until 1830, when they were driven out and the house of Orleans (a branch of the Bourbon house) was installed in the person of Louis Philippe, under whom the conquest of Algeria, begun just before his accession, was achieved. In 1848 the second republic was established, which was soon brought to an end by Louis Napoleon, who in 1852 established the second empire. The war of 1870-71 with Germany brought about the overthrow of Napoleon III. and the establishment of the third republic, and caused the loss to France of Alsace and the German part of Lorraine. Since that war France has again become a considerable colonial power by securing control of Tunis, French Indo-China, Madagascar, and extensive territories in Africa.

Frankfort-on-the-Main (Ger. Frankfurt-am-Main, frਾਂ'fõrt am mîn; L. Francofortum ad Mœnum, or Trasactum Franco-rum, —i.e., the "ford of the Franks"), a city of Prussia, in the province of Hesse-Nassau, previous to 1866 one of the free cities of Germany, and capital of the German Confederation. Originally a Roman station, Frankfort begins to figure in history in the time of Charlemagne, who had a favorite palace here. Subsequent emperors made it the seat of their court, granting it important privileges. In the thirteenth century it became a free city. After the days of Frederick Barbarossa it became the place of election of the German emperors, and in 1356 Charles IV., in the charter known as the Golden Bull, still preserved in its archives, transformed this custom into a right. The later German emperors were also crowned here. Frankfort had a long career of almost uninterrupted prosperity till the wars of the French revolution brought upon it a series of disasters. Napoleon I., however, befriended it, and made it the capital first of a principality and then of a grand-duchy. Upon his downfall it regained its independence, and the Congress of Vienna (1815) restored it to its precedence among the free towns and made it the seat of the German Diet, in which Frankfort had an independent vote. In 1866 Frankfort sided with Austria in the war against Prussia, in consequence of which it was annexed by the latter power.

Frankfort is situated in a spacious mountain-bordered plain on the right bank of the Main, in lat. 50° 6' N., lon. 8° 40' E., at an elevation of 300 feet above the sea. A large and fine suburb, Sachsenhausen, stands on the left bank, to which Frankfort proper is joined by several bridges. The suburbs, which include Bornheim and Bockenheim, are very beautiful, being studded with stately mansions and elegant villas. The old ramparts have been transformed into beautiful promenades, where attractive residences and resorts of amusement alternate with rural surroundings. The city is divided into two portions,—the old town and the new town. The former consists mainly of a congeries of old and narrow streets and has for its centre the Römerberg, or market-place (which for a long time was barred to Jews), containing the Justitia Fountain. In the old quarter the Zell has grown into a fine spacious street, the principal thoroughfare of the city. The famous Judenstrasse, "Jews' street," has long lost its characteristics, its gates having been levelled in the time of the French occupation in 1806. The streets of the new town are wide and handsome. The most fashionable quarter is the West End, contiguous to and beyond the Taunus Promenades. The Central Railway Station, located in this section and erected in 1883-88, is one of the finest and most commodious railway stations in the world. The city contains handsome squares, adorned with fine fountains and statues. Among these may be noted the Rosemarkt, with the monument to Gutenberg, the inventor of printing; the Goetheplatz, with the statue of Goethe, who was a native of this city; and the Schillerplatz. Among the public buildings are the guild-hall, or Römer (in reality a group of buildings), in which are the Wahlzimmer, or hall of election, where the electors met to choose a new emperor, and the Kaisersaal, containing a famous collection of portraits of the old German emperors. The ancient cathedral of St. Bartholomew, a Gothic structure begun in 1235, comprises the chapel in which the electors accepted the emperor after he had been anointed at the high altar. Frankfort is rich in collections connected with literature and art, as libraries, museums, and galleries, as well as in societies designed to promote them. Among the city's more prominent or interesting buildings and institutions may be mentioned the Goethe Museum and the Goethe House (in which the poet was born), the municipal record-office, the municipal library (with about 300,000 volumes), museum of art and industry, the academy of social and commercial sciences, the Rothschild library, the new exchange, opera-house (opened in 1880), the new theatre, and the Senckenberg museum. The city has both botanical and zoological gardens and an attractive palm-garden. The manufactures are not important, and are chiefly articles of verre, jewelry, tapestry, wax-cloth, carpets, tobacco and snuff, drugs and chemicals, machinery, electrical appliances, etc. It is from its banking transactions that Frankfort derives its great wealth, it being one of the principal financial centres of Europe. From its central situation Frankfort is the most important railway junction in Germany. Pop. in 1875, 103,136; in 1890, 136,819; in 1890, 179,850; in 1900, 288,989, inclusive of Bornheim, Bockenheim, and a number of minor suburban localities which have lately been united with the city. Average annual temperature, 50°; maximum temperature, 98°.

Frankfort-on-the-Oder (Ger. Frankfurt-an-der-Oder, frਾਂ'fõrt an dër o'der; L. Francofortum ad O'deram or Vidam), a city of Prussia, province of Brandenburg, and capital of a government-district of the same name, on the left bank of the Oder and on the railway from Berlin to Breslau, 50 miles E. of the former city, and in lat. 50° 22' N., lon. 14° 13' E. Its situation, on a navigable river com-noted by canals with both the Vistula and the Elbe, gives it great advantages. It is a well-built town, with several suburbs, one of which is on the right bank of the Oder and connected with the rest of the city by a newly constructed stone bridge. Among its churches, St. Mary's, founded in the thirteenth century, is worthy of notice for its large organ, richly gilt wood-carvings, and fine stained windows. The city has an imposing town-hall, a theatre, and various academic institutions. Among its numerous monuments is one to William I., unveiled in 1900. Its manufactures comprise machines and boilers, fire-arms, musical instruments, stone- and metal-ware, silks, gloves, mustard, tobacco, and sugar. It has large distilleries and railway machine-shops. Pop. in 1875, 47,180; in 1890, 51,147; in 1890, 55,738; in 1900, 61,852.

Galankin Island, Alaska, is in Sitka Sound, Alexander Archipelago, in a group of islands of its own name.

Galápagos, gá-lá-pá-gócs, commonly pronounced in English gá-lá-pá-gús, a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, on and near the equator, between lon. 89° and 92° W., 730 miles W. of the coast of Ecuador, South America, and consisting of 13 islands, the largest, Albemarle Island, being 60 miles in length. All are volcanic and abound in lavas. Most of the surface is arid, rising to 3000-3600 feet, but in the moist zones there is a fair and richly endemic flora. The islands are frequented by turtles (Sp. galápagos) of enormous size, and the birds, animals, and plants are generally of very marked and peculiar species. Many of the plants introduced by the early colonists, such as cotton, fig, orange, and tobacco, have become widely distributed, and cattle, horses, dogs, pigs, and other domesticated animals run wild. On Charles Island a small colony of Ecuadorians was planted, forming a penal settlement; and this island contains most of the population, which hardly exceeds 400. The principal islands are Albemarle, indefatigable, Chatham, James, Charles, Narborough, Hood, Barrington, Bindloe, and Abingdon. The group belongs to Ecuador.

Galicia, gal-ísh'e-á (Sp. pron. gá-lee'the-á; anc. Gal-lá-cia, the country of the Gallaeci), an old province of Spain, with the title of kingdom, now a captaincy-general, forming the provinces of Corunna, Lugo, Orense, and Pontevedra, at the NW. extremity of the peninsula. Area, about 11,000 sq. m. Its surface is generally mountainous, and the coast is deeply indented. The principal rivers are the Minho, Sil, and Ulla. The forests are extensive and feed large herds of hogs. There are fertile and well-cultivated valleys and good pasture-lands, as well as wide tracts of heath. Chestnuts form an important part of the food of the Galicians. The mineral wealth is considerable, but has not been developed. The climate is moist, mild, and equable. The mass of the Galicians, or Gallegos, are poor and ignorant, but hardy and industrious, and they make the best laborers, soldiers, and servants in the peninsula. The chief city is Corunna, which is the seat of the captain-general. Pop. in 1900, 1,941,453.

Galicia, gal-ísh'e-á (Pol. Galicja, há'litch; Ger. Galizien, gá-lit'se-en), a crown-land of Austria-Hungary, in Cisleithania, composed of the titular kingdom of Galicia and Lodomeria, the duchies of Auschwitz and Zator, and the grand-duchy of Cracow, and comprising Austrian Poland. It is bounded N. by Russian Poland, NE. and E. by the Russian governments of Volhynia and Podolia, SE. by Bukowina, S. by Hungary, and W. by Moravia and a small portion of Prussian Silesia. Area, 30,307 sq. m.

Its contour is generally defined by natural boundaries: on the S. by the Carpathians; NW. by the Vistula; SE. by the Bialy Czeremosz, a tributary of the Pruth, and for a short distance by the Dniester; and E. by the Zbrucz, a tributary of the Dniester. Part of the N. and all the NE. are without natural boundaries. The great physical features of the country are, in a manner, determined by the Carpathians and their ramifications. The loftiest summit, the Great Kriwan (on the Hungarian frontier), has a height of 8190 feet. Although harboring lingering patches of protected snow, none of the mountains properly reach the line of perpetual snow. The chief river on the N. and W. of the main watershed is the Vistula, which receives the Soła, the navigable Dunajec (whose main affluent is the Poprad), Wisłoka, and navigable San, and also drains the NE. corner by its tributary the Bug. The chief river on the other side is the Dniester, which rises near the centre of the province (becoming navigable at Sambor) and flows across it in an ESE. direction, receiving numerous tributaries on both banks. The climate is severe (the severest of any of the provinces of the empire), particularly in the S., where the land rises to the lofty Carpathian summits. The winters are long, and the summers comparatively short, but very warm. The average annual temperature at Cracow is about 47°, and slightly higher at Lemberg.

The region is still largely forested, but there are extensive areas of fine pasture-land. In general, where the elevation is small, the soil is of great fertility and yields abundant crops of wheat, rye, barley, oats, and maize. Potatoes are raised in immense quantities. Hemp, flax, and tobacco are also extensively grown. The domestic animals include great numbers of horned cattle, generally of a superior description, and a fine hardy breed of horses, well adapted for cavalry. Sheep, goats, swine, bees, and poultry abound. The minerals include marble, alabaster, petroleum, copper, calamine, coal, iron, and rock-salt. The extraction of rock-salt and petroleum is of great importance. Iron occurs in parts of the central Carpathian chain, and bog-iron ore is frequently met with in extensive seams on the plains. The best-known salt-works are those of Wieliczka, with their remarkable stalactitic cavern, and Bochnia. Manufactures have latterly made much progress, spirits, cloth, woodenware and parquetry, potash, tar, turpentine, paraffine, paper, leather, pottery, and glass being leading articles of manufacture. The principal exports are salt, petroleum, hides, wool, cattle, wood, coal, anisee-seed, linen, and brandy. The bulk of the population is of Slavic race, about evenly divided between Poles and Ruthenians, the former being Roman Catholics, while the latter belong to the United Greek Church. The superior intelligence and economic position of the Poles give them the political ascendancy. More than 10 per cent. of the inhabitants are Jews, who form a large proportion of the population of the cities. There are also many Germans. Educational establishments, both for superior and ordinary instruction, are numerous. At the head of the former stand the universities of Cracow (which also has a royal academy of sciences) and Lemberg. Capital, Lemberg. Pop. in 1890, 6,607,816; in 1900, 7,315,816. The bulk of Galicia was seized by Austria in the first partition of Poland, in 1772. Cracow was annexed in 1795, but was separated from Austria together with a small territory, in 1815, to form the Republic of Craow, which existed till 1846.

Galveston, a port of entry and capital of Galveston co., Tex., is situated on the Gulf of Mexico and on an island at the mouth of a bay of its own name, about 300 miles (direct) W. by S. of New Orleans. It is on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé, the International and Great Northern and other railroads. Lat. 29° 18' N.; lon. 94° 50' W. The island of Galveston, which separates the bay from the Gulf of Mexico, is about 30 miles in length and 3 miles in breadth. The surface is level and has a mean elevation of only 7 or 8 feet above the water. The bay extends northward from the city to the mouth of the Trinity River, a distance of 35 miles, and varies in breadth from 12 to 18 miles. The harbor of Galveston, which is the best in the state, has 12 or 14 feet of water over the bar at low tide. Through this bar the United States government has cut a deep channel, flanked by stone jetties several miles in length. Galveston, the leading commercial city of Texas, although ranking only fourth in population among the cities of the state, is next to New Orleans the most important port on the Gulf of Mexico and is the sixth commercial port of the United States. The chief articles of export are cotton, wool, hides, grain, flour, and fruit. Steamships make regular passages from this port to New York, New Orleans, Key West, Havana, Vera Cruz, and various European, Asiatic, and South American ports. The quantity of cotton shipped hence in 1902 amounted to about 2,000,000 bales. The residence quarters of the city have luxuriant gardens ornamented with magnolias, oleanders, and other subtropical plants. The chief public edifices are the city-hall, custom-house, United States court-house, theatre, opera-house, public library, cotton exchange, Catholic cathedral, etc. Galveston has iron-foundries, machine-shops, planing-mills, cigar-factories, vast grain-elevators, and manufactures of ice, flour, rope, bagging, cotton-seed oil, and cotton-cake, etc. It is the seat of the University of St. Mary (Catholic), the medical department of the University of Texas, the St. Joseph's Academy, Academy of the Sacred Heart, and the Ursuline Convent and Academy. Galveston is a Catholic bishop's see. Pop. in 1860, 7307; in 1870, 13,818; in 1880, 22,243; in 1890, 29,084; in 1900, 37,789. The city was visited by a disastrous hurricane in Sept., 1900, which caused a loss of life of about 3000 and destruction of property amounting to upward of $20,000,000. Vast works have been constructed to guard against the recurrence of a similar catastrophe, and the level of the main portion of the city has been raised several feet.

Ganges, gán'jees (Hindu, Ganga or Ganga, gung gá'), the principal river of India, the northern portion of which it traverses from W. to E. It rises by two principal heads, the Bhagirathi and Alaknanda, the former having its source in lat. 30° 54' N., lon. 79° 7' E., emerging from a glacial cavern at an altitude above sea-level of about 14,500 feet. Breaking through the Himalayas and flowing SW., the united stream emerges on the Indian plain, near the sacred city of Hurdwar, at an altitude of 1100 ft., and thenceforward continues mostly ESE. to the Bay of Bengal, which it enters by numerous mouths, after having united with the Brahmaputra in a common delta-system of vast extent and most complicated character. The total length of the Ganges is about 1500 miles. In its course it receives numerous affluents, among which the principal are the Jumna, Ramganga, Gumti, Gogra, Son, Gunduk, Kusi, and Attri, which have courses varying from 300 to 800 miles in length. For about 500 miles from its mouth the river maintains a width of a mile or more, with a uniform depth of some 30 ft. At Benares, 740 miles above the Hugli, the width of the stream is about 1450 ft. in the dry season, and nearly double this in the rainy season. The river is navigable for rafts to Hurdwar, and for steamers to Garmukhtessar, about 850 miles above Calcutta.

About 200 miles from the sea the delta of the Ganges, which is seemingly the largest delta of the globe, commences. It is a flat alluvial tract of from 80 to 200 miles in breadth. The S. extremity, or that part which borders on the sea, is known as the Sunderbunds, a dreary, unhealthy region, covered with wood and broken up by numerous creeks and rivers, many of which are salt. The whole coast of the delta is one mass of mud-banks, which are continually shifting, and among which there are several large mouths, which ships of burden can safely enter.

The periodical flood of the Ganges, which commences about the end of April or the beginning of May, proceeds from the tropical rains which begin to fall about that period. The rise of the river is at first slow and gradual, not exceeding an inch a day for the first fortnight. Afterwards it increases to 3 or 4 inches, and when the rains have become general in the countries through which the river flows, it rises about 5 inches a day, until a height of 30-45 feet above ordinary level has been attained. By the end of July all the flat country of Bengal contiguous to the Ganges and Brahmaputra is overflowed to an extent in breadth of 100 miles. After the middle of August or early September the waters begin to subside. The quantity of water discharged into the ocean by the Ganges is computed to be 500,000 cubic feet per second in the four months of the flood-season, and 100,000 cubic feet per second on an average during the remainder of the year. In times of highest flood the discharge above the delta has been found to be 1,800,000 cubic feet per second. The quantity of mud brought down annually by the stream is computed at 235,000,000 cubic yards, and it discolors the sea to a distance of 60 miles from the coast.

The phenomenon called the bore, a sudden and rapid influx of the tide in the form of an enormous wall-like wave, assumes a formidable appearance in the Ganges. In the Hugli arm of the delta (the most important channel, which admits ocean steamers of large draught to Calcutta, a distance of about 90 miles) the bore rushes onward at the rate of between 17 and 18 miles an hour, and at Calcutta it sometimes causes an instantaneous rise of 5 feet. The waters of the Ganges are held sacred by the Hindus, from Gangotri, about 15 miles from the source of the Bhagirathi, to the island of Saugur, at the mouth of the Hugli. There are particular places more eminently sacred than the rest, and to these pilgrims resort from great distances to perform their ablutions and carry off water to be used in future ceremonies.

The valley of the Ganges is one of the richest on the globe. For hundreds of miles along its course, down to the Gulf of Bengal, not a stone is to be seen. Wheat and other European grains are raised in the upper part of this magnificent valley, while in the S. every variety of Indian fruit, rice, cotton, indigo, opium, and sugar are produced in the greatest profusion. The river's banks, in many places, present views of great beauty. The busy scene which it daily exhibits, from the number and variety of boats with which it is crowded, is not, perhaps, equalled on any other river in the world. It forms, with its tributaries, and with the Gangetic canals, which convey the waters of the upper and middle river to the Doab, a great route of communication, irrigation, and traffic throughout a large part of India, and its value as a highway for commerce is all the greater from the numerous important towns and cities that lie either immediately on its banks or at no great distance from them. Of these, ascending the stream, may be named Calcutta, Murshidabad, Patna, Benares, Allahabad, Cawnpore, and Furruckabad.

quarter called Eaux-Vives. On the right bank is the Quarter St. Gervais, inhabited by the working-people, and the principal residence-quarter of the foreign colony. Here, too, are some of the finest hotels. The oldest portion of the city lies high above the water, and consists of narrow, dark, and steep streets, remarkable for the irregularity of their roof-lines. In the lower part of the old town, near the river, is the principal commercial quarter. Here is the Grand Quai du Lac with its continuation, the Quai des Eaux-Vives, with a broad esplanade, and parallel to these quays are some fine broad streets. On the right bank of the river the Quai du Mont Blanc affords a fine view of the snow-clad giant of the Alps, which is about 40 miles distant. Among the bridges may be mentioned the fine Pont du Mont Blanc and the Pont des Bergues, between which extends Rousseau's Island, with a bronze bust of Rousseau by Pradier. New boulevards encircle the city, laid out along the lines of the old fortifications which were demolished in 1851. On the left side of the river are the fine Promenade du Lac (Jardin Anglais) and Place du Port with the beautiful national monument. Farther from the river is the handsome Place Neuve, with the new theatre in Renaissance style, the Musée Rath, and the Conservatory of Music. The equestrian statue of General Dufour stands on this square. On the right bank, on the Quai du Mont Blanc, is the Place des Alpes, with the magnificent canopied marble monument erected to the duke of Brunswick (d. 1873), who left his fortune to the city. The most prominent of the churches is the mediæval Romanesque Cathedral of St. Pierre, which crowns the highest point of the old town. The interesting old prison was formerly a bishop's palace. The Hôtel de Ville (in Florentine style) is ascended by a curious inclined plane which was constructed in the sixteenth century. Facing it is the Arsenal containing the Historical Museum. Near by is the Musée Fol, with rich collections of Greek, Roman, and Etruscan antiquities. On the Promenade des Bastions are the new university buildings (1867-71). Connected with them is the botanical garden, S.E. of which is the Athénée. In the vicinity are the hall of justice and the Collège de St. Antoine, founded by Calvin. The university, founded as an academy in 1559, was raised to its present rank in 1873. It numbers over 1000 students, more than half of whom are foreigners. A considerable proportion of the students are women. Connected with the university are a large library and valuable archaeological and scientific collections.

Geneva is noted as an educational centre. It possesses a large number of technical schools as well as private schools for boys and girls, largely patronised by foreigners. There are many associations for the advancement of science and art. Among the charitable institutions of the city, the municipal hospital deserves special mention. Geneva is an important industrial and commercial centre. Its chief manufactures are those of watches and parts of watches. Among its other manufactures are jewelry, musical instruments (especially musical-boxes), philosophical instruments, and electrical apparatus. Diamond-cutting, enamelling, and the testing of chronometers are also prominent among its industries. Geneva enjoys a mild climate. Elevation, 1240 feet. Pop. in 1900, 105,710.

The origin of Geneva is unknown, but its antiquity is proved by the reference which Cæsar makes to it in his Commentaries on the Gallic War. It early became the seat of a bishopric. It was one of the capitals of the Burgundians, passed in the sixth century to the Franks, subsequently belonged to the second kingdom of Burgundy, and became incorporated with the German Empire in the eleventh century. By a grant of the emperors, the temporal was added to the spiritual power of the bishops. The rulers of Savoy, however, gradually acquired a share in the government, and at the same time the prosperous burghers began to take affairs into their own hands. The struggle between the dukes of Savoy and the citizens ended in favor of the latter early in the sixteenth century, from which time Geneva formed part of the Swiss Confederacy. Geneva played a great rôle in the Reformation as the cradle of the Calvinist movement. The city was seized by the French in 1798, and formed, till 1813, the capital of the department of Léman. In 1815, along with a small territory, it joined the new Swiss Confederacy.

Geneva, the westernmost canton of the Swiss Confederacy, bounded W. and NW. by France, N. by the canton of Vaud and the Lake of Geneva, and E. and S. by France (Haute-Savoie). Area, 107 sq. m. The surface is broken by several hills, none of which are more than 400 feet above the lake. The whole canton belongs to the basin of the Rhone, and the only streams of importance are the Rhone and the Arve, which join a short distance below the city of Geneva. The whole territory wears the appearance of a beautiful garden. The natural flora is remarkably rich and makes the surrounding country a favorite resort of the botanist. Part of the surface is under the culture of the vine; but the wine is not remarkable for either quantity or quality. Manufactures are extensively carried on (see GENEVA, city). The legislative power is exercised by a great council and the executive power by a council of state, both being elective bodies. Capital, Geneva. Pop. in 1900, 133,417, of whom 62,541 were Protestants and 67,228 Catholics.

Geneva, a county in the S.E. part of Alabama, bordering on Florida, has an area of 662 sq. m. It is intersected by the Choctawhatchee and Pea rivers. Capital, Geneva. Pop. in 1890, 10,690; in 1900, 19,096.

Geneva Lake, Wis., in the S. part of Walworth co., is about 10 miles long and varies in width from 1 to 2 miles. The water, which is deep and pure, is discharged by a creek which issues from the NE. end of the lake and enters the Fox River.

Geneva, Lake of, or Lake Lemán (Ger. Genfer See, ghen'fer sá; Fr. Lac Léman, lák lá'môn', and Lac de Genève, lák deh shen-náiv'; anc. Lemanus Lacus), a lake of Europe, between Switzerland and France. It is traversed by the river Rhone and occupies what many geologists assume to be a glacially excavated rock-basin. It is about 45 miles long and about 8 miles in greatest width, between Morges and Amphion. The surface is 1220 feet above sea-level; maximum depth, 1095 feet, between Ouchy and Evian-les-Bains. Area, 224 sq. m. Lake Geneva presents beautiful scenery and its northern and western shores afford strikingly grand views of the Mont Blanc chain. Its waters, differing from those of most other Swiss lakes, are of a beautiful deep-blue color. In common with other Swiss lakes, it presents the phenomenon of the seiches, sudden fluctuations of level due apparently to changes in the atmospheric pressure; the highest longitudinal swell is about 6 feet. The water is remarkably transparent. Among the towns situated on its banks are Geneva (at its SW. extremity), Coppet, Nyon, Rolle, Morges, Lausanne, Vevey, Montreux, Territet-Chillon, Villeneuve (at its E. extremity), Evian-les-Bains, and Thonon, the last two in Savoy. In early Roman days the lake extended considerably farther on the E. side, along what is now the valley of the Rhone, and perhaps nearly to the site of Martigny.

Genoa, jên-o-â (It. Genova, jên-o-vâ; Fr. Gênes, zhain; anc. Gen'ua), a fortified seaport of northern Italy, the most important commercial city of the kingdom, is situated at the head of the Gulf of Genoa, an arm of the Mediterranean Sea, between the rivers Bisagno and Polcevera, 75 miles SE. of Turin. Lat. 44° 24' N.; lon. 8° 53' E. The appearance of the city from the sea is beautiful and striking. It is in the form of a crescent and rises gradually from the shore,—the whiteness of the houses, the imposing outlines of the intermingling palaces, and the distant villas and gardens, heightening the effect of its picturesque position. This, together with the numerous palatial edifices which it contains, has conferred upon it the epithet of La Superba ("the proud"). It is enclosed by powerful fortifications, forming a vast semicircle, supported by numerous detached outworks, crowning hill after hill, and extending over a length of 9½ miles. In the older parts of the town the streets are extremely narrow, dark, steep, and crooked, and almost wholly inaccessible to carriages. In the newer quarters many are spacious and are lined with noble edifices. Among the finest streets are the Via Balbi, Via Garibaldi (formerly Nuova), and Via Roma, on which are palaces of superb architecture. The magnificent avenue known as the Via di Circonvallazione, skirting the hillside, commands a striking view of the city and the sea. Many of the palaces are crowded with works of art. The principal are the ducal palace (the former residence of the doges), the Doria, Serra, Giustiniana, Cambiaso, Balbi, Rosso, Bianco, Durazzo, and the Palazzo Reale, which was purchased by the royal family in 1815.

The churches and hospitals of Genoa rival the palaces in grandeur. The most remarkable of the former is the Duomo, or cathedral of San Lorenzo, founded in the eleventh century. The most conspicuous church in the general view of the city is that of Carignano, finely situated on a hill, and having a resemblance to St. Peter's in its general plan. The other churches of note are Santo Stefano; San Siro, the most ancient Christian foundation in Genoa; San Ambrogio, containing several fine paintings and splendidly decorated within; and L'Annunziata, the most sumptuous of Genoa's churches. The principal charitable institution is the Albergo de' Poveri, in which orphans and old people find shelter. The house has accommodation for 1300. The Ospedale di Pammato, founded in 1430, the orphan asylum, and the deaf and dumb institution are other famous charities. Genoa has numerous institutions devoted to the arts and sciences and the publications of its learned academies hold high rank. It possesses a university, created as such in 1812, a school of fine arts, royal marine school, and school of navigation. The Museo Civico contains collections of natural history and a botanical garden is associated with the university. The Teatro Carlo Felice, with a seating capacity of 3000, is one of the largest theatres of Italy. Genoa's most imposing monument is the statue of Columbus (who was born here or in the vicinity), erected in 1862. Genoa is the seat of an archbishop.

The manufactures of Genoa are considerable. Its velvets and silks are world-famed; and it likewise has manufactures of cloth, ribbons, damask, embroideries, artificial flowers, oil-cloth, hats, paper, essences, gloves, lace, leather and cotton goods, oils, and soap. Besides these, its work in gold, silver, and marble has a high reputation; for silver filigree and shell ("coral") work, fine cabinet-work and house-furniture, the Genoese workmen probably stand unrivalled, and their productions are sent to all parts of the world. The old port of Genoa is of a semicircular form, about three-quarters of a mile in diameter, formed by two moles projecting into the sea from opposite sides, the Molo Nuovo, or New Mole, and the Molo Vecchio, or Old Mole. This safe but inadequate harbor has been materially added to by the construction (1877-1895) of new moles and breakwaters, which have given to the city the Porto Nuovo and the Avamporto or outerport for war vessels. The aggregate waterways of the several basins now cover 555 acres. There are yards for naval construction. In mediæval times the Genoese merchants were remarkable for their enterprise and for the extent of their dealings, sharing with the Venetians the trade between Europe and the East. The commerce of the city subsequently declined greatly, but it has again assumed large proportions. The population in 1838 was 115,257; in 1881, 179,515; in 1901, 234,710.

Genoa came under the sway of Rome towards the close of the third century B.C. After the fall of the Roman Empire the city passed successively into the hands of the Byzantines, Lombards, and Franks. In the tenth century the Genoese were enabled to assert their independence. Their little state soon developed into a powerful commercial republic, formidable on the sea. They gained possession of Corsica, waged endless wars with Pisa, over whom they triumphed at the close of the thirteenth century, and planted numerous colonies in the Levant and on the shores of the Black Sea. A long contest between the two great republics of Genoa and Venice finally terminated in favor of the latter, which ultimately greatly eclipsed its rival. From the fourteenth century the Genoese state was ruled by a doge. The republic came to an end with the occupation of northern Italy in 1797 by Bonaparte, who constituted the Genoese dominions into the Ligurian Republic. This was annexed to the French Empire in 1805. In 1815, Genoa and its territory were united with the kingdom of Sardinia.

Georgia, jôr'jə-, or Grusia, groo'zə- (Georgian, Kartli or Sakartvelo; Pers. Gurjistan; Armenian, Vrastan; anc. Iberia), a country of Transcaucasia, Russian Empire, included in the governments of Tiflis and Kutais. Down to the close of the eighteenth century it was an independent kingdom. It comprises the fertile valley of the upper Kur. The region produces cereals, wine, cotton, fruits in great quantity, etc. The Georgians, forming about one-half of the whole population, have been celebrated for the athletic frames of the men and the beauty of the women. Their speech belongs to the group of Caucasian languages. The various tribes classed together as Georgians number considerably over a million souls. The great bulk dwell within the limits of Georgia.

Georgia (named in honor of George II., King of Great Britain), one of the Southern States of the American Union, bordering on the Atlantic Ocean, is bounded N. by North Carolina and Tennessee, NE. and E. by South Carolina and the Atlantic Ocean, S. by Florida, and W. by Alabama. From South Carolina it is separated by the Savannah (and Tugaloo) and Chattooga Rivers; from Florida, in part, by St. Mary's River, and from Alabama, in part, by the Chattahoochee River. Its extreme limits are the parallels of 30° 21' and 35° N. lat. and the meridians of 80° 48' and 85° 38' W. lon. Extreme length, 320 miles from N. to S.; greatest breadth, 254 miles. Area, 59,475 sq. m. Georgia was one of the original 13 states of the Union.

Physical Aspect, Minerals.—The face of the country is exceedingly varied. In the N. and NW. is a mountain-region, covering some 25 counties, whose ranges pursue a somewhat parallel NE. and SW. course across the state, terminating in the hill-country of Alabama. Numerous summits of the Blue Ridge exceed 3000 feet in altitude, and Fodder Bald Mountain attains 4821 feet. Between the mountain-ridges there is a broken country, with very fertile valleys, a delightful climate, and varied mineral wealth. Southeast of the mountains a plain or terrace, some 65 miles in average breadth, extends along the foot-hills, with a red loamy soil, naturally very productive. Another still lower and wider terrace or plain borders this region, with limits having also a general NE. and SW. direction, and containing much productive land, with districts which have a light soil. Some 60 miles in average distance from the coast is the SE. limit of the so-called pine barrens, which have afforded great supplies of timber and naval-stores and which have a productive and easily wrought soil. Along the coast and near the lower courses of the streams are rich alluvial districts, interspersed with swamps, which are available for rice-culture. The sea-islands, separated from the main-land by shallow sounds, have a soil well adapted to the growth of sea-island cotton. In the SW. there is a large area which has long been celebrated for its cotton product. In the SE. is the great Okefinokee Swamp.

A line drawn from Augusta SW. to Eufaula, Ala., roughly marks the NW. limit of a great Tertiary (Eocene) tract, which covers nearly all that part of Georgia which lies SE. of that line, except the Pleistocene and alluvion of the coast. The NW. portion of the state is mainly based upon Azoic rocks, but there is a considerable area of the Cretaceous to the E. of Columbus, and a large Silurian tract in the north-western angle of the state, crossed by narrow belts of the Devonian, upon which rest beds of Carboniferous strata. Lookout Mountain, which crosses the extreme NW. corner of Georgia, lying partly in Tennessee and also partly in Alabama, contains semi-bituminous coal of excellent quality. Gold has been found in most of the northern counties, especially in Cherokee, Lumpkin, Carroll, and Cobb cos. Among other minerals are copper, manganese, silver, zinc, lead, bauxite, fine marble, choice granite, limestone, baryta, and graphite. Petroleum is also found. The gold output for the year 1900 was only 5813 ounces, and the silver product was inconsiderable. The production of coal in the year 1903 was somewhat more than 415,000 tons. Bauxite has been extensively mined since 1889 (the annual product being several thousand tons), and the state yields a large portion of the manganese output of the United States. Natural medicinal springs, saline, chalybeate, and sulphurous, are numerous. In northern and central Georgia are a number of remarkable caves, many picturesque cataacts, romantic mountain scenery, and abundant relics of prehistoric times, such as mounds, fortifications, places of sepulture, etc. Interesting fossil remains of the mylodon, megatherium, and other species of extinct gigantic mammals occur in the coast-region.

Hydrography.—The rivers are numerous and afford important means of internal communication, but the great extension of railroads has vastly reduced the amount of steamboat travel and commerce. The streams more or less suited for steam navigation are the Savannah, Ogeechee (with its main tributary the Canunoochee), Altamaha (with its constituents the Oconee and Ocmulgee), Satilla, St. Mary's, Flint, Chattahoochee, Withlacoochee, upper Coosa, and some others. The sounds which separate the sea-islands from the main-land constitute together a safe and land-locked channel, well suited for steamboat communication. In the highlands, the numerous streams afford abundant and unfailing water-power.

Climate.—The climate is as varied as the face of the country. The mountain-country in the N. has cool, delightful summer weather, while its winters are mild and comfortable. This region is very healthful. The pine-barrens of the centre and S. are equally healthful, but warmer, and are especially recommended as a winter-resort for consumptives. The coast-region and the S. portion generally have a summer climate which is very enervating to persons of northern origin, and people are here liable to severe attacks of malarial and remittent fevers. Snow falls not unfrequently in the northern and central regions, and less frequently in the south, but never remains long.

Agricultural Resources.—Cotton and corn are the leading farm productions. The coast-region is well adapted to the growth of the high-priced sea-island cotton. The cotton crop is mainly produced in the central, west-central, and southwestern regions. The total commercial crop for the year 1899-1900 was 1,345,700 bales, grown over an area of 3,550,000 acres. In the year 1904-5 it amounted to about 2,000,000 bales, being exceeded by that of Texas alone. Of late years Georgia has wisely extended her area of cornfields. Georgia has much fine grazing-land. Tobacco is chiefly produced in the N.; rice and some sugarcane are grown in the S., and the former has long been a staple crop in the lowlands. The agricultural product for the year 1900 was (in bushels): corn, 34,119,530; wheat, 5,011,133; oats, 7,010,040; rye, 109,529; potatoes, 391,816; the yield of hay was 190,237 tons. The acreage grown under rice was in 1900, 21,998; under sugarcane, 26,056. The wool-clip for the same year was (gross) 1,737,818 pounds. Pigs are fattened extensively, mainly for home consumption. Fruit-culture, wine-growing, and market-gardening are steadily increasing. Large quantities of fruits, especially melons and peaches, are shipped to the north. Peanuts are very extensively cultivated.

Manufactures, Lumber, etc.—Georgia has taken a new and important departure in manufacturing industries. In 1900 alone, 36 new cotton-mills were established, operating 240,000 spindles. The value of the cotton-goods produced in the same year was $18,544,910. Cotton-seed oil was produced to the value of $3,064,112. Woollen goods are also manufactured to a considerable extent. Machine-shops, gineries, tobacco-factories, tanneries, and lumber-mills are numerous. The output of the tobacco-industry in 1900 was 3,962,316 cigars. The lumber business is especially large, a very considerable area of the state being still covered with forest. Valuable species of pine, oak, cedar, ash, cypress, hickory, and other timber trees abound. The shipments of yellow pine during 1900 exceeded 20,000,000 feet. Brunswick, Darien, and Savannah are seats of large exports of the forest products, Savannah being the largest naval-stores port of the United States. Atlanta, Augusta, Macon, and Savannah are the leading manufacturing centres. In 1900 there were in operation in the state 5791 miles of railroad.

Counties.—Georgia has 137 counties.—Appling, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Bartow, Berrien, Bibb, Brooks, Bryan, Bulloch, Burke, Butts, Calhoun, Camden, Campbell, Carroll, Catoosa, Charlton, Chatham, Chattahoochee, Chattooga, Cherokee, Clarke, Clay, Clayton, Clinch, Cobb, Coffee, Colquitt, Columbia, Coweta, Crawford, Dade, Dawson, Decatur, DeKalb, Dodge, Dooly, Dougherty, Douglas, Early, Echols, Effingham, Elbert, Emanuel, Fannin, Fayette, Floyd, Forsyth, Franklin, Fulton, Gilmer, Glascock, Glynn, Gordon, Greene, Gwinnett, Habersham, Hall, Hancock, Haralson, Harris, Hart, Heard, Henry, Houston, Irwin, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Johnson, Jones, Laurens, Lee, Liberty, Lincoln, Lowndes, Lumpkin, Macon, Madison, Marion, McDuffie, McIntosh, Meriwether, Miller, Milton, Mitchell, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Murray, Muscogee, Newton, Oconee, Oglethorpe, Paulding, Pickens, Pierce, Pike, Polk, Pulaski, Putnam, Quitman, Rabun, Randolph, Richmond, Rockdale, Schley, Screven, Spalding, Stewart, Sumter, Talbot, Taliaferro, Tatnall, Taylor, Telfair, Terrell, Thomas, Towns, Troup, Twiggs, Union, Upson, Walker, Walton, Ware, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, White, Whitfield, Wilcox, Wilkes, Wilkinson, Worth.

Cities and Towns.—Of these the principal are Atlanta, the capital and largest city, a thriving railroad centre, the seat of extensive trade and manufactures (pop. in 1900, 89,872); Savannah, the principal seaport and commercial centre (pop. 54,244); Augusta, on the Savannah River (39,441); Macon, on the Ocmulgee (23,272); Columbus, on the Chattahoochee (17,614); Athens, on the Oconee (10,245). Other places of importance are Brunswick, Rome, Americus, Thomasville, Griffin, Marietta, Milledgeville, and Gainesville. The principal seaports are Savannah, Brunswick, Darien, and St. Marys.

Public Education.—In 1899 the school population was 756,900, and the number of buildings used as school-houses 6622. Athens, favorably situated in the north, is the seat of the state university, with academic, technical, law, and medical departments, and having a branch called the State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts. At Dalton is the North Georgia Agricultural College, also a state institution, affiliated with the university. There is a non-sectarian college at Bowdon. Macon is the seat of Mercer University (Baptist) and of the Wesleyan Female College. Emory College, at Oxford, is under Methodist supervision. Atlanta and South Atlanta have the Atlanta and Clark Universities, the Georgia School of Technology, the Morris Brown College, and the Spelman Institute. Savannah has the Academy of St. Vincent de Paul. There are normal schools and colleges at Athens, Outhbert, Demorest, Macon, Milledgeville, Thomasville, and Trenton. At Cave Spring is a state institution for deaf-mutes and at Macon an academy for the blind.

Government, Population.—The governor is chosen for a term of 2 years. The legislature (general assembly) consists of a senate of 44 members, elected for 2 years, and a house of 175 representatives, likewise chosen for 2 years. The state has 11 representatives in the lower house of Congress.

Pop. in 1775, 75,000; in 1790, 82,548; in 1800, 162,686; in 1810, 252,433; in 1820, 340,985; in 1830, 516,283; in 1840, 691,392; in 1850, 906,185; in 1860, 1,057,286; in 1870, 1,184,109; in 1880, 1,542,180; in 1890, 1,837,363; in 1900, 2,216,331. Nearly half of the population is colored (1,034,813 in 1900). The number of foreign-born persons in 1900 was only 12,403.

History.—Georgia was the last colony established by the English in what is now the United States. It was founded in 1733 by Oglethorpe and his associates as a refuge for poor debtors. The first settlement was made at Savannah. In 1752 the colony was made a royal province. Georgia warmly espoused the cause of her northern sister-provinces in the Revolutionary war. In 1778, Savannah was taken by the British, who held it till 1782. The first state constitution was adopted in 1777. In 1798, Mississippi Territory was set off from Georgia, which up to that time had been bounded on the W. by the Mississippi River. A few years later Georgia relinquished all her remaining lands in the present states of Mississippi and Alabama, and received from the United States a strip 12 miles wide along her present northern boundary, since which time her limits have remained unchanged. The lands of the Creeks and Cherokees within the boundaries of Georgia passed into the possession of the state in the course of the first three decades of the nineteenth century. In 1832 and 1838 respectively the Creeks and Cherokees were removed from the state. From this time Georgia prospered greatly and merited her title of the Empire state of the South. In 1861 she passed the ordinance of secession. It was not until 1870 that the work of reconstruction was completed and the state readmitted into the Union. The expositions held at Atlanta in 1881 and 1895 gave a great impulse to the industrial development of the state.

The W. boundary is Lake Tanganyika, in lon. 30° E.; the N. boundary traverses Lake Victoria Nyanza, in lat. 1° S., and the SW. boundary includes the NE. shore of Lake Nyassa. The political boundaries are British East Africa, the Congo Free State, Rhodesia and the British Central African Protectorate, and Portuguese East Africa. The small coast-land of Mafia belongs to the colony. Area, estimated at 364,000 sq. m. The surface is low and flat along the coast-belt, rising to extensive plateaus in the interior, from which rise high isolated mountain-groups, among them the volcanic Kilima-Njaro, on the NE. boundary. The rivers flow in three systems,—viz., to the Indian Ocean (Rufiji, Pangani, etc., none navigable), to the Victoria Nyanza, and to Lake Tanganyika. The country is agricultural, producing fruits, coconuts, areca-nuts, millet and tropical grains, castor-oil, sugar-cane, vegetables, tobacco, cotton, coffee, cacao, india-rubber, vanilla, etc. Cattle and sheep are raised. The exports include ivory, rubber, gums, sesamum, etc. The interior portions, which are traversed in various directions by good roads, are largely desert-like and sterile. Coal, iron, malachite, salt, and a little gold are found. Dar-es-Salaam, one of the chief seaports, is the seat of government. Pop. estimated at 6,000,000 (1139 Europeans, in 1900).

try in the world. The manufactures comprise linens, silks, and woollens, steam-engines of every description, locomotives, iron, steel, and all kinds of iron- and steel-ware from the heaviest cannon to needles, wooden-ware, clothing and the accessories of clothing, furniture, ornamental metal-work, beet-sugar and other food-stuffs, clocks and toys, paper and leather manufactures, chemicals, tobacco, and porcelain. Brewing is a great industry. Stettin is one of the principal ship-building seats in the world. Germany is the foremost country of continental Europe in the extent of its iron- and steel-industry. The number of persons employed in the principal manufactures was in 1895: in iron manufactures, 524,707; machinery and instruments, 582,672; textiles, 993,257; paper, 152,909; leather and india-rubber, 160,343; and wooden-ware, 598,496. Some of the leading articles of export, with their valuations in marks, were for the year 1901: textiles, 1,051,100,000; metals and metal-ware, 740,000,000; chemicals and drugs, 408,370,000; machinery and instruments, 315,765,000; leather, 266,400,000; and paper, 112,540,000. The principal ports are Hamburg (with Cuxhaven), Bremen (with Bremerhaven), Stettin, Danzig, Königsberg, Memel, and Altona. Internal commerce is greatly facilitated by the numerous navigable rivers, all of which are traversed by steamers, and by an excellent system of railways and canals. The number of miles of operated railroads was in 1900, 32,192, nearly all of which was owned by the state governments. (For details regarding manufactures, see PRUSSIA, SAXONY, BAVARIA, etc.)

Colonies.—The colonial possessions of Germany comprise German East Africa, German Southwest Africa, Kamerun, Togoland, Kaiser Wilhelm Land (part of New Guinea), Bismarck Archipelago, Caroline Islands, Pelew (Palau) Islands, Ladrones (Marianne Islands), part of the Solomon Islands, Marshall Islands, part of the Samoan Islands, and Kiaochau. Their total area is estimated at about 1,025,000 sq. m., and their population at about 14,000,000.

History.—The country between the northern outliers of the Alps and the North and Baltic seas, and between the Rhine and the Vistula, known to the Romans as Germania, was inhabited in ancient times by a large number of independent tribes or peoples of the same Germanic blood. At the beginning of the Christian era the Romans extended their sway to the upper Danube (the southern limit of Germania) and along the valley of the Rhine to its mouth. Among the prominent Germanic peoples at this time were the Suevi (whence the name Swabia), Ubii, Batavi, Chauci, Chatti, Cherusci, Sigambri, Frisii, Hermunduri, Marcomanni, and Quadi. Other German tribes came to the fore at the time of the great migration of nations, in the midst of which the Roman Empire of the West was extinguished in A.D. 476. The Alemanni, Goths, Burgundians, Vandals, Longobards, Franks (a confederation of tribes), Suevi, Saxons, and Heruli occupied different provinces of the Roman world, the Vandals even crossing over to Africa. The Franks became the most powerful. Their realm expanded until under their great King Charlemagne it extended from central Italy and the Ebro to the Elbe, and from the Bay of Biscay to the borders of modern Hungary. In 800 Charlemagne was crowned Roman Emperor by the pope, thus reviving in semblance the Roman Empire of the West. The Frankish realm was partitioned among his grandsons in 843. The kingdom of the western Franks became France, and the kingdoms of Germany, Italy, and Lorraine were formed (the last to become soon a duchy of Germany), to which later were added two Burgundian kingdoms (afterwards united into the kingdom of Arles). The migration of nations had brought the Slavs into the German lands as far as the Elbe, and it was only after great efforts that the Germans succeeded in pressing them back or subduing them. The descendants of Charlemagne reigned in Germany down to 911. The royal crown then became elective. The king was chosen by the great lords of the realm, among whom the dukes of Saxony, Franconia, Swabia, and Bavaria were at first especially prominent. It soon appeared convenient to allow the succession to continue in the same family, and thus there were dynasties of German monarchs. In 962 Otto the Great, king of Germany, after conquering the crown of Lombardy, revived in a measure the empire of Charlemagne by having himself crowned Holy Roman Emperor by the pope at Rome. This was the beginning of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation, which endured until 1806. The German princes elected and crowned the king of Germany, and the papal coronation made him Holy Roman Emperor. After 1530 the papal coronation was dispensed with. The right of choosing the sovereign became gradually the privilege of a select few of the German princes. By the Golden Bull of Charles IV., issued in 1356, the following seven princes were designated as imperial electors: the king of Bohemia, the duke of Saxony, the margrave of Brandenburg, the elector-palatine of the Rhine (the capital of the Palatinate was Heidelberg), and the archbishops of Treves, Mainz, and Cologne. To these were added in the seventeenth century the electors of Bavaria and Hanover. The Holy Roman Empire in the Middle Ages included the present German Empire (with the exception of the Prussian provinces of East and West Prussia and Posen), the present Cisalpine Austria (without Galicia, Bukovina, and Dalmatia), Switzerland, the northern half of Italy, a great part of what is now eastern France (the Arletan territories, Upper Lorraine, etc.), the present kingdom of the Netherlands, most of Belgium, and Luxemburg.

In Italy the authority of the German emperors had been set aside before the close of the thirteenth century; Switzerland emancipated itself from their overlordship by the close of the Middle Ages; the nominal dependence of the Netherlands was declared at an end by the Peace of Westphalia in 1648. In the course of centuries Germany became split up into hundreds of states, some large, others not extending beyond the walls of a small town. There were duchies, principalities, margraviates, landgraviates, counties, lordships, and free imperial cities (each a little republic), and the ecclesiastical principalities, including archbishoprics, bishoprics, and abbey. There was one kingdom, Bohemia, down to 1701, when the elector of Brandenburg assumed the title of King of Prussia. This medley of ruling powers was represented in the Imperial Diet (Reichstag), which was convened down to the seventeenth century by the emperor at his pleasure, but which finally met regularly at Ratisbon. From 1438 (with slight intermission) the imperial throne of Germany was occupied by the Austrian dynasty of the Hapsburgs. Austria became an overshadowing power in the empire, in which there was no single state powerful enough to oppose her until the rise of Prussia. The Napoleonic wars brought about the dissolution of the Holy Roman (or German) Empire. The Emperor Francis II. in 1804 assumed the title of Emperor of Austria (Francis I.), and in 1806 laid down the imperial crown of Germany. On the downfall of Napoleon the German states, now reduced to thirty-nine in number, formed the German Confederation, which had no head, and in which Austria and Prussia were the controlling powers. The representative body in the German Confederation was the Bundestag, or Federal Diet, in which the individual states as such were represented. The war between Prussia and Austria in 1866 brought about the dissolution of the German Confederation. Austria was ejected from the Germanic body. Prussia absorbed Hanover, Hesse-Cassel, Nassau, and Frankfurt. Schleswig (which had hitherto not been a part of Germany) and Holstein, having been liberated from Danish rule in 1864, were incorporated with Prussia. Under the lead of Prussia the North German Confederation was established in 1866, embracing Germany north of the Main. This had a Bundesrat, or Federal Council, and a national parliament or Reichstag. The Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71 united the South German states (Bavaria, Württemberg, and Baden) with the states comprising the North German Confederation, and a new German Empire was established, with a hereditary head, the king of Prussia, a Bundesrat, and a Reichstag. William I. was crowned German emperor at Versailles on Jan. 18, 1871. The grand-duchy of Luxemburg and the principality of Liechtenstein remained detached from the Germanic body. By the treaty of Frankfurt, in 1871, France ceded Alsace and the German-speaking part of Lorraine to the German Empire. The position of Germany as a colonizing power may be said to date from 1884, when she engaged in the work of colonization in Africa.

There are about 20,000,000 Germans outside of the German Empire. Of these nearly half inhabit Cisleithan Austria, a large portion of which, in an ethnographic sense, may be said to form part of a greater Germany. Hungary has over 2,000,000 Germans, and Switzerland (where they constitute two-thirds of the population) has an equal number. The largest body of Germans dwelling outside of their own country (Germany and Austria) is to be found in the United States, where the German-born population amounts to about 3,000,000. The number of Germans in Russia is between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000. There is a large German population in the Argentine Republic and Brasil.

It has various manufactures and is the seat of a Lutheran theological seminary, which was organized in 1826, and of the Pennsylvania College (Lutheran), which was organized in 1832 (both with large libraries). The surrounding country is uneven and is diversified by several hills called Seminary Ridge, Cemetery Hill, etc. At Gettysburg occurred (July 1-3, 1863) one of the most important and decisive battles of the Civil War, between the Union forces under General Meade and the Confederates under General Lee, resulting in the victory of the former. To commemorate this battle and those who fell in it, numerous monuments have been erected upon the field, and it is thought that the scene of the combat is better marked than any other battlefield of the world. The National Cemetery is one of the most beautiful in the country. About 1 mile from Gettysburg is the Katalysine Spring, which is a summer-resort with a fine hotel. Pop. in 1900, 3495.

Gettysburg, a banking post-village, capital of Potter co., S.Dak., 75 miles W. of Redfield, on the Chicago and Northwestern R. Pop. about 550.

Ghats, or Ghauts, the name of two mountain-chains or lines of elevation which border the coasts of the peninsula of British India, diverging from each other northward at the Nilgiri Hills, in lat. 11° 20' N., lon. 76° E., and enclosing E. and W. the Deccan, or great table-land of southern India. The EASTERN GHATS, which are largely discontinuous, and whose general elevation does not exceed 1500-2000 feet, stretch NE. for about 500 miles, broken through by the Cavery and Pennar rivers, to the Kistna River. The WESTERN GHATS extend through 13° of latitude, virtually from Cape Comorin to the banks of the Tapti, with a short but remarkable break, the Palghacherry Pass, S. of the Nilgiris. Average distance from the sea, 30 to 40 miles; general elevation, between 3000 and 5000 ft.; the highest summit of the Nilgiris, which may properly be said to be a part of this range, is the Dodabetta, 8760 ft. The Western Ghats are generally abrupt on the W. side, and crowned with fine forests of bamboo, rattan, poon, and teak. They are mainly constructed of trap rock and, as seen from the coast, are of ruggedly bold aspect. The annual rain-fall is in places, as at the station of Mahabaleshwar, several hundred inches.

Ghaziabad, gā'zee-ā-bād', a town of British India, in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, 15 miles ENE. of Delhi. Pop. about 10,000.

Ghazipur, gā'zee-poor', a district of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, British India, in the Benares division. It lies wedge-shaped between the Ganges on the S. and the Gogra on the NE.

Ghazipur, a town of British India, capital of the district of Ghazipur, on the Ganges, 46 miles NE. of Benares. It is a great opium depot. Roses are extensively cultivated in the environs for the manufacture of rose-water. Pop. in 1901, 39,186.

Ghazni, a city of Afghanistan. See GHUZI.

Ghedi, gā'dee, a village of Italy, 9 miles SSE. of Brescia. Pop. about 3000 (commune, 4000).

Gheel, gail, a commune of Belgium, province and 26 miles SSE. of Antwerp. It is celebrated as a place of treatment for the insane, who are here boarded in families and employed in labor, under public supervision. Pop. in 1900, 13,340.

Gheens, a post-village of Lafourche parish, La. Pop. about 70.

Gheluwe, hā-lū'wēh, a village of Belgium, in West Flanders, 9 miles SE. of Ypres. Pop. in 1902, 4647.

Ghemlik, ghēm'leek', or Ghio, ghee'o, a seaport of Asia Minor, on the Gulf of Ghemlik, an arm of the Sea of Marmora, 16 miles NNE. of Brusa. Pop. about 5000.

Ghemme, ghēm'mā, a town of Italy, province and 14 miles NW. of Novara. Pop. about 4500.

Ghent, ghēnt (Fr. Gand, gōw; Flem. Gend, hēnt; Sp. Gante, gān'tā; Ger. Gent, ghēnt; L. Gande and Gandavum), a city of Belgium, capital of East Flanders, at the confluence of the Lys with the Scheldt, 31 miles NW. of Brussels. It is traversed by a series of canals and water-ways, forming a sort of network within the town and dividing it into 23 islands, which are connected by over 60 bridges. The quaint aspect which the city with its old gabled houses and narrow streets formerly presented is gradually vanishing before the broad streets and open places which have been laid out. Among the most noteworthy of the squares are the Market Place of Friday (Marché du Vendredi), the scene of the most important events in the history of Ghent, and the Kouter, or Parade, the fashionable promenade of the city. The principal ecclesiastical buildings of Ghent are the cathedral of St. Bavon, founded in the tenth century, with a famous pulpit and beautiful interior decorations; the tarred church of St. Nicholas, one of the oldest buildings in the city; the church of St. Michael, and the church of St. Peter, recently restored. Among the secular edifices worthy of notice are the Gothic cloth-hall (1325); the town-hall (1518-35), with a beautiful late-Gothic north facade; the Skipper's House, the finest Gothic guild-house in Belgium; the Château des Comtes, the seat of the counts of Flanders; the belfry famous for its 44 bells; the museum in the old Augustinian Abbey; the buildings of the university (founded in 1816); and the Institut des Sciences. The city has a zoological and a botanical garden. The Béguinage, a sort of nunnery, forms a little town of itself.

Ghent reached the height of its industrial prosperity in the fifteenth century, and is still of great commercial importance. It has long been famous for the product of its looms. It has iron-foundries and manufactures of lace, machinery, leather, paper, and tapestries. Horticulture is carried on on a large scale. The town has a good harbor and an active trade in grain, rape-seed oil, and flax. Ghent is a bishop's see.

The origin of Ghent is uncertain. It is first mentioned as a town in the seventh century, but does not appear to have acquired much importance till the twelfth century. By the end of the thirteenth century it was nearly as large as at present, and much larger than Paris then was. In the bloody feuds which agitated Flanders up to the middle of the fourteenth century, Ghent took a leading part, and repeatedly by the turbulence of its citizens provoked a fearful retribution. In 1384, when the county of Flanders passed by marriage to the house of Burgundy, Ghent followed its fortunes. It rose unsuccessfully against its new rulers in the middle of the next century. Charles the Bold was crowned at Ghent in 1467. Here the marriage of his daughter, Mary of Burgundy, with Maximilian of Austria was celebrated in 1477, and here Charles V. was born in 1500. The Gantois, having resisted the power of Charles, were terribly chastised in 1540. Ghent suffered much during the aggressions of Louis XIV., the campaigns of Marlborough, and the wars of the French revolution; but by the advantages of its position and the industry of its citizens it overcame these calamities. Pop. in 1890, 153,740; in 1900, 160,949.

He-brál-tar'; It. Gibilterra, jee-bil-tén'ná; anc. Cal'pe; Arab. Jebel-Tarik, jéb'el tá-rook',—i.e., the "Hill of Tarik," a Saracen leader, who landed here in 711 and built a fort), a town and strongly fortified rock at the S. extremity of Spain, in Andalusia, belonging to Great Britain. Lat. 36° 7' N.; lon. 5° 21' W. This rock-fortress is connected with the continent by a low sandy isthmus, 1½ miles long and ¼ mile broad, having the Bay of Gibraltar on the W. and the open sea of the Mediterranean on the E. Near the point of junction of the isthmus with the main-land are the Spanish lines, between which and the rock is a space called the "Neutral Ground." The highest point of the rock, known as Highest Point, is 1396 feet above sea-level; its N. face is almost perpendicular, while its E. side is full of forbidding precipices. It terminates at its S. extremity in Europa Point. The W. side is less steep than the E., and between its base and the sea is a narrow level, on which the town is built. The higher slopes, although appearing barren, are fairly overgrown with vegetation, of which the cactus forms a striking feature. Partridges, rabbits, and a troop of Barbary apes constitute a portion of the fauna.

Numerous caverns and galleries, extending from 2 to 3 miles in length, and of sufficient width for carriages, have been cut in the solid rock, forming sheltered communications from one part of the garrison to another. Along these galleries, at intervals of every few yards, are port-holes bearing upon the neutral ground and bay; while trees, shrubs, and flowers of various kinds have been planted at different points, both for ornament and utility. The signal station is located at a height of 1295 feet. St. Michael's Cave, the entrance to which is 1080 feet above the sea, contains a hall 230 feet in length. Of late years the fortifications have been carefully strengthened at every vulnerable point.

The town of Gibraltar consists of the North Town, or town proper, the suburban South Town, and the Light-house. The principal buildings are the governor's residence, known as the Convent, the admiralty, naval hospital, exchange, victualling-office and barracks, and a handsome theatre. Gibraltar is the see of an Anglican bishop, and there are Protestant and Roman Catholic churches, Jewish synagogues, regimental and public schools, public libraries, etc. The Anglican cathedral, or Church of the Holy Trinity, is in the Moorish style of architecture. The Alameda, or central garden, luxuriant in its floral growths, is the most attractive point of the city. Gibraltar is a free port and an entrepôt for the distribution of British manufactures to the countries bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, and it is the seat of a large contraband trade with Spain. The importation of live-stock from Galicia (Spain) and Morocco constitutes a large part of its trade. Gibraltar is a crown-colony of Great Britain, the administration of which is vested in the governor, who is also commander-in-chief of the troops; the power of enacting laws is vested in the governor alone, there being no legislative or executive council. All criminal cases are determined according to the laws of England.

Gibraltar, under the name of Calpe, and Mount Abyla, now called Apes' Hill, opposite to it on the African coast, were called by the ancients the Pillars of Hercules, and in very early ages were regarded by the people dwelling E. of them as the western boundary of the world. Gibraltar came into possession of the English, by conquest, in 1704; it was afterward repeatedly besieged, but always without success. Its defence, under Elliott against the French and Spanish floating batteries in 1782, is one of the memorable events in the military annals of Europe in the eighteenth century. Pop. of the town together with the garrison in 1901, 27,460 (garrison, 5349).

Glasgow, glas'go (L. Glas'cua), the industrial and commercial metropolis of Scotland, and, next to London, the most populous city of Great Britain, in the co. of Lanark, on both sides of the river Clyde, 42 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh and 405½ miles by rail NW. of London. Lat. of observatory, 55° 52' 42" N.; lon. 4° 17' 38" W. It is one of the best built cities of Great Britain, with broad, spacious streets lined with handsome residences, a fine river-frontage, and several open squares. Of these the most important are Glasgow Green in the SE. of the city, a broad stretch along the river containing Nelson's monument, the People's Palace, a museum, art gallery, and winter-garden; George Square, the finest park of the city, surrounded by splendid public buildings and containing, in addition to a column 80 feet high to the memory of Walter Scott, equestrian statues of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, and statues of Peel, Pitt, Gladstone, Burns, and others; West End Park, crossed by the river Kelvin, and containing the Stewart Memorial Fountain and the Corporation Art Galleries, including the City Industrial Museum (1901); Queen's Park in the SW. of the city, and Alexandra Park in the extreme E. Of the streets the most important are Sauchiehall, Buchanan, Union, and Argyll.

Glasgow contains many handsome buildings, although, with the exception of the cathedral, none are of historic interest. The cathedral, built between 1197 and 1446, in the early English Gothic style, is chiefly remarkable for its richly ornamented and exceedingly beautiful crypt. It has recently been embellished with superb stained-glass windows. The municipal buildings, post-office, Bank of Scotland, Merchants' House, and many others, all fronting on George Square, are massive and perfectly proportioned edifices. Among other noteworthy structures are the new buildings of the university. The University of Glasgow was founded in 1451 by Bishop Turnbull. It is attended by over 2000 students. Its library contains 175,000 volumes. To the university belongs the Hunterian Museum, with its famous anatomical collection. The Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College, founded in 1886, has a large attendance. Among other noteworthy institutions are St. Mungo's College and Anderson's College, the Mitchell Library, containing about 150,000 volumes, the Corporation Public Libraries, and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum.

The extraordinary growth of Glasgow and its development as a commercial city are due to the fact of its situation on the river Clyde and to its location in a rich coal- and iron-region. About half a century ago the Clyde at Glasgow was so shallow that it could be forded, but as a result of a vast outlay of money upon engineering works of great magnitude the harbor has been enlarged so as to permit of large ocean steamers lying at anchor in it. There are over 6 miles of quays. Glasgow Bridge, crossing the Clyde, was rebuilt in 1899. In the extent of its merchant marine Glasgow is surpassed by few cities in the world. In 1901 it comprised 1586 vessels (1141 steamers), with an aggregate tonnage of 1,606,852. The banks of the Clyde are lined with ship-building and engineering works. The other great industries of the town include the manufacture of steam-tubes, boilers, locomotives, machinery for sugar-mills, muslins and other textiles, chemicals, starch, sugar, paper, glass, china, tobacco, whiskey, and beer. Spinning and dyeing are extensively carried on. The St. Rollox Chemical Works, with a chimney 435 feet high, exceeded in height only by a neighboring one of 455 feet, are famous. The water-supply of Glasgow is drawn from Loch Katrine, 42 miles distant. Among the suburbs of Glasgow are Govan and Partick, with a combined population of 125,000. The city of Paisley is in the outskirts.

Glasgow is a very ancient city. It came into existence in 560, when St. Kentigern built an abbey on the site of the present cathedral. In 1636 it became a royal burgh, but it was not until the union in 1707 that it rose to industrial importance. Then, by the opportunities for trade with America offered to it, it entered on its career of commercial prosperity. Glasgow is the seat of a Roman Catholic archbishop and of an Anglican bishop. Pop. in 1801, 77,385; in 1881, 511,415; in 1901, 760,423.

Glastonbury, an ancient municipal borough of England, co. of Somerset, 25 miles SW. of Bath, occupying a peninsula formed by the river Brue. It presents a quaint appearance. The most interesting feature of the town is the ruin of the ancient abbey founded in the eighth century by King Ina and replaced in the tenth century by another built by St. Dunstan. This abbey, which was the sepulchre of several of the early English kings, was burned in 1184, and on its site a handsome minster was begun by Henry II., which was not dedicated till 1303. The ruins of the abbey were long used as a stone-quarry, and consequently its remains are very scanty. There still stands, however, on the site of the "Vetusta Ecclesia," the roofless chapel of Our Lady or St. Joseph, in Transition Norman, with a fifteenth century crypt. Other structures of interest are the Abbot's Kitchen, with four huge fireplaces and a pyramidal roof; George Inn, originally an inn for pilgrims to the abbey; the so-called Tribunal, Abbot's Barn, and the church of St. John the Baptist, with a fine perpendicular tower. The town has manufactures of sheepskins, mats, rugs, gloves, and pottery. Glastonbury has been traditionally identified with the Avalon of the Arthurian legends. It was here that, according to tradition, Joseph of Arimathea brought the Holy Grail and founded the first Christian church in Great Britain. Pop. in 1901, 4016.

Gloucester, or Gloucestershire, glos'ter-shir, a county of England, in its W. part, bordering on the estuary of the Severn. Area, 1237 sq. m. It has 3 natural divisions: the E. being the Cotswold Hills (highest point, 1134 feet), the middle forming the fertile valley of the Severn and its affluents, and the division W. of the Severn consisting mostly of the Forest of Dean. Chief rivers are the Severn, Upper and Lower Avon, Wye, and Isis (Thames). In the hills sheep-farming is the chief branch of industry. The vale of the Severn, once famous for vineyards, is now equally so for its corn-lands, orchards, and gardens. The dairy-industry is important. Coal and iron abound. Capital, Gloucester. Pop. in 1901, 331,516.

Gloucester, glos'ter (anc. Glevum; later L. Claudia Castra), a city and county borough of England, within the territorial limits of the co. of Gloucester, on the E. bank of the Severn, 33 miles NNE. of Bristol. The old Roman ground-plan of the city still survives in the four streets which meet at right angles in the middle of the town at what is known as the Cross. Below some of the houses in these streets remains of the Roman walls may be seen. The nunnery which existed in Gloucester as early as the seventh century gave way to a monastery about 820, which was in turn succeeded by a great Benedictine abbey. The abbey church became the nucleus for the cathedral which was built from 1088-1498. This structure, though substantially Norman, is in reality perpendicular in character. It has a central tower rising 225 feet and containing the famous "Great Peter," a bell weighing nearly 3 tons, a splendid east window, the largest in England, with magnificent stained glass (1350), and the exquisite shrine of King Edward II. with a handsome canopy. The fan-vaulted cloisters are unmatched in England. Among the other interesting buildings of Gloucester are the new episcopal palace, the picturesque twelfth century deanery, the West Gate, the New Inn (built about 1450 for pilgrims), and the Tolsey, or guild-hall. Gloucester has car- and engineering-works, flour-mills, iron-foundries, ship-building yards, and manufactures of agricultural implements, cutlery, chemicals, soap, and matches. Its commerce is very important. The Gloucester and Berkeley Canal, 17 miles long, was completed in 1827. Gloucester returns 1 member to parliament. It has a greater amount of tonnage employed in the domestic fisheries than any other town in the United States. The number of men employed in the cod-, halibut- and mackerel-fisheries is over 5000. Gloucester has a large import trade, chiefly in salt, coal, and lumber. It has important granite-works, forges and foundries, ship-yards, etc., and manufactures of oil-clothing, sails, twine, anchors, and fish-glue. The city is a favorite summer-resort, and the picturesqueness of its surroundings attracts many artists. The harbor of Gloucester is one of the best on the coast and is accessible at all seasons for vessels of the largest class. Gloucester was occupied as a fishing station as early as 1624, being the first settlement made on the N. shore of Massachusetts Bay. It was incorporated as a town in 1642 and became a city in 1874. Pop. in 1850, 7786; in 1890, 24,667; in 1900, 26,121.

Goa, a town on the W. coast of India, belonging to Portugal, situated on an island at the mouth of the Mandona River, 250 miles SSE. of Bombay. Lat. 15° 28' N.; lon. 73° 51' E. Goa was taken by Albuquerque in 1510, and was made the capital of the Portuguese dominions in the East. It soon rose to great commercial importance; but with the downfall of the Portuguese power in the East the town declined, and the viceroy finally transferred his residence to Panjim (New Goa). In the days of its prosperity, when it is said to have had 200,000 inhabitants, Goa presented a magnificent appearance. It was a city of churches, whose architecture far surpassed in grandeur and taste that of any others built by Europeans in the East. The chapel of the palace was built after the model of St. Peter's at Rome; the church of St. Dominic was adorned with paintings by the Italian masters; that of the Jesuits contained the fine tomb of St. Francis Xavier; the cathedral and the Augustinian church were noble structures. The viceroy's palace was a splendid edifice. The public buildings have now gone to decay and the population of the place has dwindled to less than 2000.

province and formerly of a Moorish kingdom of its own name, beautifully situated partly on two spurs of the Sierra Nevada and partly on the level land between them. The river Genil flows past the town and the picturesque Darro through it. Granada is divided into four quarters: Alhambra, occupying one of the hills with the famous fortress and palace; Albaicín, a suburb, on another hill, once the proud abode of Moorish nobles, now the poorest part of the city and the home of gypsies; Antequera, another suburb; and, on the level ground between the two hills, the town proper divided by the Darro. Granada, in spite of its labyrinth of narrow and dirty streets and its many decaying houses, presents, with its numerous gardens, its towers and magnificent buildings, a wonderful appearance. Among the many buildings of interest, the most remarkable is the old Moorish palace of the Alhambra, situated on a plateau once surrounded by massive walls and towers, commanding an entrancing view. The Alhambra is plain on the outside, but of most complex and elaborate workmanship within. Its Court of Myrtles, with a great fortified tower and beautiful arcades, the richly ornamented Hall of the Ambassadors, the celebrated Court of the Lions with a remarkable fountain, the fairy-like Hall of the Two Sisters, and many other smaller apartments render the Alhambra the most charming embodiment of Moorish art. Among the other fine edifices of Granada are the magnificent, though unfinished palace of Charles V.; the Generalife, or summer-residence, of the Moorish princes; the cathedral (begun in 1523), in the main the best monument of the Renaissance period in Spain; the Capilla Real (1506-17) in late-Gothic style, the burial chapel of the "Catholic Kings," with splendid monuments of marble; the Puerta Judiciaria (a Moorish tower gate-way); and the Alcazaba, with its ruins of the old walls and towers, practically all that remains of the original fortress. Granada possesses a university founded in 1531. The chief industries are the manufacture of textiles, paper, and hats. There are distilleries. Granada was founded early in the Middle Ages, near the site of the ancient Illiberis. About 1235 it became the capital of a Moorish kingdom which attained to almost matchless splendor. Its population at this period has been estimated as high as 700,000. In 1491 it remained the last stronghold of the Moors in Spain, defending itself against Ferdinand and Isabella, who took possession of it at the beginning of 1492. After the expulsion of the Moors from Spain, Granada declined rapidly. Pop. in 1900, 75,900.

Gravois (grá'vi) Mills, a post-hamlet of Morgan co., Mo., 28 miles S. of Tipton.

Gravosa, grá-vo'sá, a small seaport of Dalmatia, near Ragusa, of which it is the port.

Grawn, a post-village of Grand Traverse co., Mich., on the Pere Marquette R. The banking point is Traverse City. Pop. 100.

Gray, grá, a town of France, capital of an arrondissement in the department of Haute-Saône, on the Saône, here bordered by a fine quay, 29 miles SW. of Vesoul. It has an interesting church and a fine town-hall. It carries on an active trade. Pop. (commune) about 6500.

Gray, a county in the SW. part of Kansas. Area, 852 sq. m. It is intersected by the Arkansas River. Capital, Cimarron. Pop. in 1900, 1264.

Gray, a county of the Panhandle of Texas, traversed by the North Fork of the Red River. Area, 860 sq. m. Pop. in 1890, 203; in 1900, 480.

Gray, a post-village of Jones co., Ga., on the Central of Georgia R., 15 miles NE. of Macon, its banking point. Pop. about 200.

Gray, a post-village of Bingham co., Idaho. The banking point is Idaho Falls. Pop. about 200.

Gray, a banking post-town of Audubon co., Iowa, on the Chicago and Northwestern R. Pop. in 1900, 180.

Gray, a post-village of Knox co., Ky. The banking point is Barboursville. Pop. about 200.

Gray, a post-village of Cumberland co., Me., in Gray township (town), about 18 miles N. of Portland. It has manufactures of lumber, etc., and is the seat of Pennell Institute. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1388.

Gray, a post-village of Herkimer co., N.Y., about 20 miles NE. of Utica. Pop. 150.

Graybill, a post-hamlet of York co., Pa., 5 miles SW. of York.

Graybill, a post-village of Collin co., Tex. The banking point is Sherman. Pop. about 90.

Graycourt, a post-town of Laurens co., S.C., on the Charleston and Western Carolina R. The banking point is Laurens. Pop. in 1900, 181.

Graycreek, a post-village of Las Animas co., Colo. The banking point is Trinidad. Pop. about 150.

Gray Hawk, a post-village of Jackson co., Ky.

Grayling, a banking post-village, capital of Crawford co., Mich., on the Ausable River and on the Michigan Central R., 92½ miles NW. by N. of Bay City. It has manufactures of lumber, etc. Pop. about 1600.

Graylock, Mass. See GRAYLOCK.

Graymont, a post-village of Emanuel co., Ga., on the Millen and Southwestern R., 15 miles NE. of Stillmore. Pop. about 200.

Graymont, a post-village of Livingston co., Ill., on the Illinois Central R. The banking point is Pontiac. Pop. about 125.

Gray Peak, a mountain of the Adirondack group, in Essex co., N.Y., has an altitude of 4902 feet.

Grayrock, a post-village of Franklin co., Tex.

Grays, a post-village of Woodruff co., Ark. The banking point is Augusta. Pop. about 150.

Grays Chapel, a post-hamlet of Jackson co., Ala.

Grayscreek, a post-hamlet of Cumberland co., N.C.

Gray's Ferry, a station within the limits of Philadelphia, Pa., on the Schuylkill River and on the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington R., 3 miles from the initial station.

Graysflat, a post-hamlet of Marion co., W.Va.

Gray's Harbor, an inlet of the Pacific Ocean, in Chehalis co., Wash. The Chehalis River enters the eastern end of the inlet, which extends from the ocean inland nearly 15 miles.

Grayskill, a post-hamlet of Roane co., Tenn.

Grayslake, a banking post-village of Lake co., Ill., on the Wisconsin Central R., 12 miles W. of Waukegan. Pop. in 1900, 416.

Grays Landing, a post-hamlet of Greene co., Pa., on the Monongahela River, 12 miles WSW. of Uniontown.

Grayson, grá'son, a county in the west-central part of Kentucky, has an area of 525 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by Rough Creek and is also drained by Caney and Nolin creeks. Capital, Leitchfield. Pop. in 1890, 18,688; in 1900, 19,878.

Grayson, a county in the N. part of Texas, has an area of 1012 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by the Red River and is partly drained by the East Fork of the Trinity River. Capital, Sherman. Pop. in 1890, 53,211; in 1900, 63,661.

Grayson, a county in the SW. part of Virginia, bordering on North Carolina, has an area of 438 sq. m. It is intersected by the New (or Kanawha) River. A long ridge, called Iron Mountain, extends along the N. border of this county. Capital, Independence. Pop. in 1890, 14,394; in 1900, 16,853.

Grayson, a post-village of Crittenden co., Ark., 7 miles S. of Marion. Pop. 100.

Grayson, a post-village of Stanislaus co., Cal., on the San Joaquin River, 50 miles S. of Stockton. Pop. 60.

Grayson, a banking post-town, capital of Carter co., Ky., is on the Little Sandy River, 23 miles S. by W. of Rivoton. It is on the Eastern Kentucky R. It has coal- and tobacco interests. Pop. in 1900, 604.

Grayson, a post-village of Caldwell parish, La. Pop. about 75.

Grayson Springs, a post-hamlet and summer-resort of Grayson co., Ky., 4½ miles ESE. of Leitchfield.

Gray's Peak, Colo., a peak of the Rocky Mountains, about 50 miles W. of Denver, in lat. 39° 38' N., lon. 105° 48' W. It rises to a height of 14,341 feet above the level of the sea.

Graysport, a post-village of Grenada co., Miss., on the Yalabusha River, 12 miles E. of Grenada. Pop. 75.

Gray's River, a small stream of Pacific co., Wash., enters the Columbia River 15 miles NE. of Astoria.

Grays River, a post-hamlet of Wahkiakum co., Wash., on Gray's River.

Grays Thurrock, a town of England, co. of Essex, on the N. bank of the Thames, 3 miles NW. of Grays. It has grown rapidly in recent years and has many fine villas. Pop. in 1901, 13,834.

Gray Summit, a post-village of Franklin co., Mo., on the Missouri Pacific R. The banking point is Pacific. Pop. 100.

Graysville, a town of Jefferson co., Ala. Pop. in 1900, 319.

Graysville, a post-town of Oconee co., Ga., on the Western and Atlantic R., 18 miles ESE. of Chattanooga, Tenn. Pop. in 1900, 183.

Graysville, a post-village of Sullivan co., Ind., 28 miles S. by W. of Terre Haute.

Graysville, a post-hamlet of Putnam co., Mo.

Graysville, Herkimer co., N.Y. See GRAY.

Graysville, a post-village of Monroe co., Ohio, 25 miles NE. of Marietta. Pop. in 1900, 174.

Graysville, a post-hamlet of Huntingdon co., Pa., about 25 miles NE. of Altoona.

Graysville, a post-village of Rhea co., Tenn., on the Queen and Crescent Route. The banking point is Dayton. Pop. about 275.

Graysville, a post-hamlet of Floyd co., Va., about 70 miles WSW. of Lynchburg.

Graytown, a post-village of Ottawa co., Ohio, 18 miles by rail E. of Toledo. Pop. about 200.

Graytown, a post-town of Victoria, Australia, 7½ miles N. of Melbourne.

Grayville, a banking city of Edwards and White co., Ill., on the Wabash River and on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis and the Illinois Central R., 15 miles NE. of Carmi. It has saw- and planing-mills, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1948.

Graxalema, grá-thá-lá'má, a town of Spain, province and 48 miles ENE. of Cadix. Pop. in 1900, 5587.

Greensbrough, a town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, England. Pop. in 1901, 3131.

Greason, a post-village of Cumberland co., Pa., on the Cumberland Valley R., 5 miles WSW. of Carlisle. Pop. about 250.

Greasyridge, a post-hamlet of Lawrence co., Ohio.

Great Abaco, West Indies. See ABACO.

Great Aughwick Creek, of Pennsylvania, enters the Juniata River in Huntingdon co., Pa.

Great Bahama. See GRAND BAHAMA.

Great Barrier Island, Pacific Ocean. See OREA.

Great Barrier Reef, a vast natural breakwater which skirts the coast of Queensland, Australia, on its NE. side, through a length of nearly 13 degrees of latitude (from Torres Strait on the N. to lat. 23° S.). It is in the main of coral formation, and upward of 1600 miles in length, enclosing a smooth-water channel 10-30 miles in width. It is broken by numerous passages (Flinders Passage, Trinity Opening, Cook's Passage, Olanda Entrance, etc.), and is of the type of coral-structure known as "barrier reef."

Great Barrington, a banking post-village of Berkshire co., Mass., in Great Barrington township (town), on the Housatonic River and on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 17 miles (direct) SSW. of Pittsfield. It is situated in the picturesque Berkshire Hills and is a Favorite summer-resort. Many of the private mansions are among the finest in the United States. The Congregational church contains a magnificent organ with nearly 4000 pipes. The town has manufactures of cotton and woolen goods, electrical appliances, etc. Quarries of good building-stone are worked here. The Sedgwick Institute is located here. Pop. of the town in 1900, 5854. Elevation, 729 feet.

Great Basin, a plateau, bounded on the E. by the Wasatch Mountains and on the W. by the Sierra Nevada. It comprises the western part of Utah, nearly all the state of Nevada, and a portion of southeastern California, extending E. and W. about 450 miles, with a width nearly equal to its length. The surface is diversified by numerous mountain-ranges, rising from a table-land, the lowest part of which is nearly 4500 feet above the level of the sea. Fresh water is scarce in this vast basin, the rivers of which, except on the immediate S.E. border, send no tribute to the ocean, but either sink in the desert sand, evaporate, or flow into some saline lake. Among the remarkable features of this basin is Great Salt Lake. Other lakes are Humboldt, Sevier, Pyramid, Carson, and Walker. The chief streams flowing in the basin are the Humboldt and Sevier rivers. In a recent geological period two vast lakes, with their levels standing at high elevations, occupied considerable areas of the basin, Lake Lahontan in the N.W. and Lake Bonneville, of which the present Great Salt Lake is a reliet, in the E. The mountains of the region, being seemingly formed as monoclinical uplifts or through successional fault-breakages, have been thought to exemplify a new type of mountain construction, and have been designated Basin Ranges. The quantity of rain that falls here is small, and irrigation is required to render the soil productive. The basin is nearly destitute of timber.

Great Bassa, the chief port of Liberia, about 60 miles S.E. of Monrovia.

Great Batanga, a coast trade- and mission-station of Kamerun, German west Africa.

Great Bear Lake, in Canada, is intersected by the Arctic Circle. Its shape is irregular, and it has an area of 11,200 sq. m. Length, from N. to S., nearly 175 miles. Its surplus water is discharged through the Great Bear River into the Mackenzie River. Average depth, upward of 270 feet.

Great Belt. See BELTS, GREAT AND LITTLE.

Greatbelt, a post-village of Butler co., Pa., on the Pennsylvania R., 16 miles S.E. of Butler. Pop. about 100.

Greatbend, a banking city, capital of Barton co., Kan., on the Arkansas River and on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé and the Missouri Pacific R., 83 miles N.E. of Dodge City. It has flouring-mills, grain-elevators, etc., and ships grain, wool, and live-stock. The Central Normal College is located here. Pop. in 1900, 2470.

Greatbend, a post-village of Jefferson co., N.Y., on the Black River and on the New York Central and Hudson River R., 11 miles above Watertown. It has paper-manufactures. Pop. about 400.

Greatbend, a post-village of Richland co., N.Dak. Pop. about 60.

Greatbend, a post-hamlet of Meigs co., Ohio, on the Ohio River.

Greatbend, a post-borough of Susquehanna co., Pa., on the Susquehanna River and on the Lackawanna and the Erie R., 47 miles N. of Scranton. It has manufactures of leather, brushes, cigars, etc. The banking point is Susquehanna or Binghamton, N.Y. Pop. in 1900, 836.

Greatbend, a township of Susquehanna co., Pa. Pop. in 1900, 1000.

Great Berkhamstead, a town of England. See BERKHAMSTEAD, GREAT.

Great Bras d'Or. See BRAS D'OR.

Greatbridge, a post-village of Norfolk co., Va., at the head of the Elisabeth River, 10 miles S.S.E. of Norfolk. Pop. about 150.

Great Britain, or Britain, brit'v'n (L. Britan'nia), the largest island of Europe, containing England, Wales, and Scotland. Previous to 1707 England and Scotland were separate kingdoms, which for the space of a century had been united under one crown. In that year the legislative union was effected, and thus was formed the kingdom of Great Britain. The legislative union of Ireland with Great Britain dates from 1801. The British Isles constitute the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, frequently called simply the United Kingdom. Great Britain is separated from the continent by the English Channel, the Strait of Dover, and the North Sea. Lisard Point, its southern extremity, is in lat. 49° 57' 52" N.; Dunnet Head, in Caithness, the most northerly point, in lat. 58° 40' 24" N. The most easterly point is Lowestoft, on the coast of Suffolk, in lon. 1° 44' E.; the most westerly, Airdnamurchan Point, in the N. part of Argyllshire, Scotland, in lon. 6° 13' W. The distance from Lisard Point to Dunnet Head is about 600 miles. The greatest breadth of the island, from Land's End to the easternmost part of Kent, is about 330 miles. Area (inclusive of islands, but excluding the Isle of Man), 88,120 sq. m. (England and Wales, 58,324 sq. m.; Scotland, 29,796 sq. m.). The eastern coast forms a waving and continuous though not unbroken line, but the western coast is extremely irregular and deeply indented with many bays and arms of the sea, interspersed with numerous islands. The S.E. part of Great Britain is a level alluvial surface, the centre undulating and hilly, the W. and N.W. mountainous and irregular. A series of mountain elevations, more or less continuous in their ramifications and interlocking spurs, but constituting distinct orographic and geologic systems, occupies the greater part of the W. and N., beginning at Land's End, in Cornwall, and covering a large part of Wales, the western and northwestern counties of England, and most of Scotland. Among the better-known groups or subdivisions of these mountains are the Cotswold Hills of Gloucestershire, the Cambrian Mountains (in Wales), the Pennine Chain, the Cheviot Hills (forming much of the boundary between England and Scotland), and the Grampians (with the Highlands), in Scotland. The highest elevation in England is Sea Fell Pike, in Cumberland, 3210 feet; the highest in Wales, Mount Snowdon, 3560 ft.; and in Scotland, the culminating point of the British Isles, Ben Nevis, 4406 ft. (For a fuller account of the relief of the land, see ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, and WALES.) The largest rivers are the Severn, Dee, Mersey, and Clyde, on the W., and the Thames, Trent and Ouse (with their estuary, the Humber), Tees, Tweed, Tyne, Forth, Tay, Dee (of Scotland), and Spey, on the E. The principal lakes are those of Cumberland and Westmorland, in England, and Loch Lomond, Tay, Ness, and Marae, in Scotland. Loch Lomond, noted for its beautiful scenery, has an area of about 34 sq. m. A distinctive structural feature of the land is the deep depression, known as Glen More, or the "Great Glen," which in Scotland separates the N.W. Highlands from the Highlands of the S.E., and which is in great part occupied by a chain of linear lakes (Ness, Oich, Lochy). The principal bays and estuaries are the Bristol Channel, Cardigan Bay, Morecambe Bay, Solway Firth, Firth of Clyde, Firth of Lorn, and the Minch, on the W.; the estuary of the Thames, the Wash, the Humber, and the firths of Forth, Tay, Moray, and Cromarty, on the E.; while on the S. there are Falmouth, Plymouth, and Portsmouth harbors, Spithead, and the broad Lyme Bay.

The British Isles, or "United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland," form an archipelago of hundreds of islands and rocks. The principal islands and groups are Britain, Ireland, the Isle of Wight, Anglesea, Man, the Scilly Islands, Bute, Arran, the Outer and Inner Hebrides, Orkney, and Shetland. The Channel Islands, lying off the coast of France, belong to Great Britain. All of these parts lie virtually in an area of comparatively shallow water, or on a subcontinental plateau or bank, and give unmistakable evidence of having at no ancient period been dismembered from the European main. In the N., Scotland was united with Norway, and in the S., England with France. A large (or even the greater) part of the North Sea is of (geologically) modern formation, perhaps not antedating the first appearance of man. Area of the archipelago, 121,027 sq. m. Pop. in 1871, 31,629,299; in 1891, 37,888,153; in 1901, 41,609,320; in 1905, upward of 43,000,000. Being surrounded by the ocean, and having the "drift" of the Gulf Stream washing the W. coasts, the mean annual temperature of the British Isles is equal to that of countries in much lower latitudes on the continent of Europe, while the winter temperature is much higher. The mean annual temperature of the central parts of the archipelago is about 48° Fahr., that of Unst, in Shetland, being 44.5°, and of Cornwall, in the extreme S., 51.5°. The average July temperature of London is 64°. The coldest region in winter is the E., between the neighborhood of London and Shetland, where the January temperature is 39°. The average annual rainfall is about 33.5 inches. On the western edge of the Scottish Highlands the rainfall is about 80 inches; in the Lake District of England and in parts of Cornwall and Devon, 60 inches, and in the region of the Thames, less than 25 inches. Though variable, the climate of Great Britain is markedly salubrious. The indigenous vegetation partakes of the character of that of the contiguous parts of Europe, and contains few or no species peculiar to the archipelago. All the grains and grasses, and the common European fruits, grow in almost all situations not too elevated, and both agriculture and horticulture have been brought to great perfection. The breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine are of the best description. Of wild animals the fox, badger, wild-cat, stoat, marten, otter, hare, and rabbit are the principal. The brown bear, wolf, wild boar, and beaver, which inhabited the region in the Roman period, have long since been exterminated. The stag and fallow deer are still preserved. Many of the mammals occurring in the major island, as the roebuck, polecat, brown hare, certain weasels, and the field-mice are wanting in Ireland, where, likewise, there is no serpent of any kind. The viper is the only poisonous serpent found elsewhere in the region. Of the total area of the United Kingdom, 37,156,000 acres (48 per cent.) were under crops and grass in 1902; 23,412,000 acres (30 per cent.) were grazing lands and heaths; and 3,038,000 acres, woodland and plantations. The corn crops (excluding Ireland) covered 7,184,290 acres; green crops, 3,147,888 acres; hops, 48,031 acres; and flax, 835 acres (9394 in 1874). In Ireland the corn and green crops covered 2,377,000 acres. The acreage of wheat in Great Britain in 1903 was 1,581,457 (less than one-half of the acreage in 1874); of barley, 1,858,484; oats, 3,140,242; beans, 238,261; peas, 180,868; potatoes, 564,286; turnips, 1,603,301. For Ireland the figures were: wheat, 37,654 (one-fifth of the acreage in 1874); barley, 158,688; oats, 1,097,512; beans, 2975; peas, 289; potatoes, 620,390; turnips, 287,656. The annual production of wheat in Great Britain in recent years has averaged somewhat over 50,000,000 bushels; in Ireland, a little over 1,500,000 bushels. The average annual yield of potatoes in the British Isles is about 6,000,000 tons, Ireland raising nearly as much as the whole of Great Britain. The average yield of wheat per acre in Great Britain is about 30 bushels; in Ireland it is about 10 per cent. greater. A peculiar feature of the agriculture in Great Britain is the comparatively small number of holdings; this is not the case in Ireland. The number of sheep in Great Britain in 1902 was 25,765,766; cattle, 6,555,978; and swine, 2,299,567. In Ireland the cattle, sheep, and swine numbered collectively 10,400,000. The total value of the product of metals from British ores in 1901 was £13,917,433. Of this the iron product was £12,836,622; tin, £556,571 (representing 4560 tons of ore); lead, £254,599; copper, £37,661 (representing 532 tons of ore); gold (6225 ounces), £23,042; and silver, £19,764. The coal product, represented by 219,046,945 tons, was valued at £103,456,552. Of the total coal output, England mined 153,000,000 tons; Scotland, 32,800,000 tons; Wales, 32,600,000 tons; and Ireland, 183,000 tons. The total number of persons employed in and about the mines of the United Kingdom was, in 1901, 839,178.

The manufacturing industries of Great Britain, whose rapid development was due to the large stores and close association of native coal and iron, and to the numerous navigable waters, surpass in extent those of every country in the world with the exception of the United States. Of first importance is the textile industry, the value of the exports of which constitute more than one-third the value of the total exports of the United Kingdom, being in 1902: cotton manufactures and yarn, £72,453,217; woollens and worsteds, £20,466,600; linens and apparel, £5,891,778. The centre of the cotton-industry is located in Lancashire, England (Manchester, Oldham, Preston, Blackburn, etc.). Among the great seats of the textile industry outside of England are Glasgow (cottons), Dundee (linens), and Belfast (linens). Paisley manufactures vast quantities of cotton thread, and Dublin is noted for its poplins. Among the chief seats of the woollen-industry are Huddersfield, Bradford, Leeds, and Dewsbury. Halifax and Kidderminster are noted for their carpets. Next in importance to the textile industry is the manufacture of metal goods and machinery, especial distinction having been obtained in the manufacture of steel pens, pins and needles, hardware and cutlery, fire-arms, ordnance, and locomotives. Prominent in this field are Birmingham, Sheffield, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Glasgow, Coatbridge, Wolverhampton, Bradford, Leeds, Bolton, Oldham, and Stockton. The ship-building industry, the chief centre of which is the Clyde, is also of the first importance. Other important manufactures are those of hosiery (Nottingham, Leicester), pottery (the greater number of factories of which are located in the "Potteries," a district in Staffordshire), chemicals, paper, leather (which employs 400,000 workers), books, etc. There were, in 1899, 6969 breweries, the beer brewed in 1900-01 being valued at £13,940,536. The production of whiskeys and other spirituous liquors is also very large. The total value of British products exported in 1902 was £283,539,980 and of foreign and colonial products, £65,814,813; the value of the imports, £523,860,284. Of the last, the articles of food and drink were valued at £210,000,000, and the raw materials for textile manufactures at £78,570,000. The British fisheries are among the most important in the world. The number of men employed in 1901 was approximately 104,000, and the value of the fish landed was (excluding salmon and shell-fish) £9,044,502. The number of sailing vessels of the United Kingdom engaged in the home and foreign trade in 1901 was 7026; of steam vessels, 7648; total tonnage, 9,524,496. The total number of vessels entering the different ports was 361,117, registering 104,418,121 tons. Among the chief seaports are: London, Liverpool, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Bristol, Hull, Southampton, Newport, Dover, and Grimsby in England; Cardiff and Swansea in Wales; Glasgow, Greenock, Leith (the port of Edinburgh), Dundee, and Aberdeen in Scotland, and Dublin, Belfast, and Cork in Ireland. The chief naval ports are Chatham, Portsmouth, and Plymouth.

The railroad mileage in 1901 was 22,678; the operating lines having in England and Wales 15,398 miles, in Scotland 3562 miles, and in Ireland 3208 miles. The length of canals was, in 1898, 3967 miles, the traffic-tonnage of which was upward of 39,600,000.

The following cities of the United Kingdom had over 200,000 inhabitants in 1901: London (the capital of England and of the British Empire), Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Belfast, Bristol, Edinburgh (the capital of Scotland), Dublin (the capital of Ireland), Bradford, West Ham, Hull, Nottingham, Salford, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Leicester.

The government of Great Britain is a limited monarchy. The constitution is a fabric evolved gradually through the course of centuries and is in great part unwritten. The legislative authority is vested in the Parliament (Lords and Commons). The members of the House of Lords comprise peers of the blood royal, English bishops, English peers, hereditary and created (dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, barons, all of whom are life peers), Scotch representative peers (elected for duration of parliament), and Irish representative peers (elected for life), numbering in all about 600. The House of Commons consists of 670 members (of whom 377 represent the counties, 234 the parliamentary boroughs, and 9 the universities), 495 of whom are chosen by the electors of England and Wales, 103 by those of Ireland, and 72 by those of Scotland. Parliament meets in annual session, and the duration of a parliament is limited to seven years. The government is conducted by a prime minister, who is always the head of the political party which happens to be in power, assisted by a cabinet. The composition of the cabinet is not always the same, the number of members varying from about a dozen to about 20. The cabinet is generally presumed to include the first lord of the treasury, the lord chancellor, the lord president of the council, the lord privy seal, the chancellor of the exchequer, the first lord of the admiralty, and the five secretaries of state,—viz., for home affairs, foreign affairs, for the colonies, for India, and for war. Among other officials who are likely to be included in the cabinet are the chief secretary for Ireland, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, the post-master-general, and the president of the board of trade. The president of the local government board and one or two other officials may also be given seats. The Episcopalian form of church government, of which the sovereign is the head, is the state-established religion in England, and the Presbyterian form that of Scotland. For the history of Great Britain see ENGLAND.

The British Empire is the largest in the world, extending into every zone and climate, comprising one-fifth of the land area of the globe, and embracing under its rule about one-fourth of the population of the world. The lands belonging to or controlled by England have an area of about 11,000,000 sq. m. and a pop. of about 400,000,000. The area and population of its chief divisions are given in the following table:

(See the countries named in the above table.)

Great Butte des Morts, a lake in Winnebago co., Wis., an expansion of the Neenah River, about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles long and from 1 to 2 miles wide.

Great Cacapon, a post-village and resort of Morgan co., W. Va., on the Baltimore and Ohio R., 32 miles NW. of Martinsburg. It is on the Potomac River, at the mouth of the Cacapon River. Pop. about 200.

Great Cacapon River, W. Va. See CACAPON.

Great Captain's Islands, in Long Island Sound, S. of Greenwich, Conn., with a fixed light.

Great Car'limons', an island of the Malay Archipelago, in the Strait of Malacca, SW. of Singapore.

Great Catwick, an island of the China Sea, off the coast of Cochinchina. Lat.  $10^{\circ} 6' N$ .

Great Coco Island. See COCO ISLANDS.

Great Corn Island, in the Caribbean Sea, E. of the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua.

Great Crosby, a town of England. See CROSBY, GREAT.

Great Crossings, a post-village of Scott co., Ky., on the North Elkhorn River,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles from Georgetown.

Great Cumania, Hungary. See CUMANIA.

Great Dividing Range, a mountain backbone of southern Australia, forming a westerly extension of the Australian Alps. In a more special meaning, the E.-W. range of Victoria, which unites with the Pyrenees on the W. and with the Hume Range on the E.

Great Doorn, a river of Cape Colony, Africa, an affluent of the Olifant's River. To the east of it is the Little Doorn.

Great Driffield. See DRIFFIELD.

Great Egg Harbor, N.J., an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean, between Cape May and Atlantic co.

Great Egg Harbor River, N.J., rises in Camden co., runs southeastward through Atlantic co., and enters Great Egg Harbor Bay. It is about 60 miles long. Sloops ascend it to May's Landing.

Great E'quinnuk' Creek, of Wayne co., Pa., flows into the Delaware River.

Greater Grand Rapids, Wis. See GRAND RAPIDS.

Greenterville, a post-village of Pima co., Ariz. The banking point is Tucson. Pop. about 150.

Greentfalls, a post-village of Montgomery co., Md., on the Potomac River, 9 miles SW. of Rockville. Pop. about 250. The river here falls 80 feet within  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles.

Great Falls, a city, capital of Cascade co., Mont., on the Missouri River and on the Great Northern R., 99 miles NE. by N. of Helena. It has large smelting- and reduction-works, breweries, flouring-mills, etc. It is an important shipping point for wool. Pop. in 1900, 14,950. The Missouri at this place has a total fall of 500 feet and is contracted from upward of half a mile to 300 yards. Elevation of the city, 3200 feet above the sea.

Great Falls, a former post-village of Stafford co., N.H., now coextensive with Somersworth township (town), on the Salmon River and on a branch of the Boston and Maine R., 5 miles N. of Dover. See SOMERSWORTH.

Great Falls, a post-hamlet of Fairfax co., Va., 7 miles NE. of Herndon.

Great Farlingdon, England. See FARINGDON.

Great Fish Bay, southwestern Africa, is an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean. Lat.  $16^{\circ} 30' S$ .; lon.  $11^{\circ} 47' E$ .

Great Fish River, or Back River, a river of Canada, rises near the northern shore of Lake Aymer, NE. of Great Slave Lake, and, after a tortuous NE. course, enters an inlet of the Arctic Ocean in lat.  $67^{\circ} 8' N$ .; lon.  $94^{\circ} 40' W$ . Length, about 500 miles.

Great Fish River, a river of Cape Colony, rises in the Sneeuwbergen (Snow Mountains), flows tortuously SSE. through the districts of Somerset, Albany, etc., and enters the Indian Ocean near lat.  $33^{\circ} 37' S$ .; lon.  $27^{\circ} E$ .; after a SE. course estimated at 230 miles. The mouth is closed by a bar. Its affluents are the Graak, Tarka, and Little Fish rivers.

Great Glacier, Canada. See ILLECEILLEWANT.

Great Green Island, in Knox co., Me., lies in the Atlantic Ocean, NW. of Matinicus Island.

Great Grimaby, a town of England. See GRIMSBY.

Great Harwood, a town of Lancashire, England, 3 miles from Accrington. It has coal-mining industries. Pop. in 1901, 12,015.

Great Island, an island on the N. side of Cork Harbor, Ireland. Length,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  miles. Queenstown is on its S. shore.

Great Island, at the entrance of Portsmouth harbor, N.H., near the SW. side. On it is a light, in lat.  $43^{\circ} 3' 30'' N$ .

Great Island, the largest of the Furneaux Islands, in Bass Strait, between Australia and Tasmania.

Great Kanawha (ka-naw'wa), a river which rises in the Blue Ridge of North Carolina, runs northeastward into Virginia, and then changing its course traverses several counties in West Virginia, and enters the Ohio River at Point Pleasant, W. Va. It receives the Gauley River in Fayette co., W. Va., above which confluence the stream is generally known as the New River. Its entire length is estimated at 450 miles. It is navigable by steamboats from its mouth to Kanawha Falls, a distance of about 100 miles.

Great Karroo, Cape Colony. See CAPE COLONY.

Great Kei (or Kai) River, Cape Colony. See KEI.

Greatkills, in Richmond co., N.Y., a post-station of the city of New York.

Great Lake, Tasmania. See CLARENCE LAKE.

Great Lakes, a collective name for the 5 large lakes lying on the United States-Canada border, and forming the upper waters of the St. Lawrence system (Superior, Huron, Michigan, Erie, and Ontario).

Great Liakhov, Siberia. See LIAKHOV.

Great Lion, a river of South Africa. See GANKA.

Great Marlow, a town of England, in Buckinghamshire, on the Thames, here crossed by an iron suspension-bridge, 5 miles NNW. of Maidenhead. Pop. in 1901, 4526.

Great Mills, a post-village of St. Mary co., Md. Pop. 60.

Great Namaqualand (na-ma'kwai-land), or Na'-maland, the S. part of German Southwest Africa, bordering S. on the Orange River. It is generally desert, without water, and with but scanty rainfall. Mountain-ranges (chiefly of the "table" variety peculiar to South Africa) run parallel to the coast, attaining altitudes of 5000 feet. The coast-settlement of Angra Pequena (or Lüderitz Bay) was the first African colony of Germany. Other settlements are the mission stations Bethany and Beersheba, and Stolzenfels on the Orange River. The region forms part of a protectorate under the name of German-Namaland.

Greatneck, a post-village of Nassau co., N.Y., 16 miles ENE. of Brooklyn, on Long Island Sound and on the Long Island R. Pop. about 1000. The banking point is Flushing.

Great Ogeechee River, Ga. See OGECHEE.

Great Ohoopsee River, Ga. See OHOOPSEE.

Great Paredon Kay, Bahamas. See PAREDON.

Great Pedee, S.C. See PEDDEE, GREAT.

Great (or Sandy) Point, the N. extremity of Nantucket Island, Mass. It has a fixed light. Lat.  $41^{\circ} 28' N$ .

Great Pond, a post-village of Hancock co., Me., on the S. shore of Great Pond, 23 miles E. of Milford. Pop. 80.

Great Popo, Guinea. See GRAND POPO.

Great River, a post-village of Suffolk co., N.Y., on the Long Island R. The banking point is Bayshore. Pop. about 400.

Great Saint Bernard. See SAINT-BERNARD.

Great Salt Lake, Utah, is in the NE. part of the Great Basin and at the W. base of the Wasatch Mountains. It is about 80 miles long, with a breadth varying from 20 to 35 miles. The surface is 4218 feet above the level of the sea. This lake has no outlet. Its principal tributaries are the Bear, Jordan, and Weber rivers, all of which enter at the E. side. It encloses several islands, one of which, Antelope Island, is about 18 miles long. The water is a saturated solution of common salt (chloride of sodium), and in 1850 contained 22.4 per cent. of solid matter (chiefly chloride of sodium; in minor quantities, chloride of magnesium and sulphate of soda, etc.), an amount which has since been considerably reduced. In 1869 it was but 15 per cent. The greatest depth is about 48 feet. Several species of insects and a brine-shrimp have been found in these waters. The lake is merely a relict of a former much larger body of water, to which geologists have given the name of Lake Bonneville, the ancient upper terrace line of which stands nearly 1000 feet above the present surface. The present waters are subject to considerable fluctuations, having at this time an average depth of only 13 feet, the same as 50 years ago, while in 1869 the depth was about 26 feet. The rise of the waters during the wet cycle of 1865-1866 was 13 feet; the fall between 1886 and 1902, 11.5 feet. Garfield Beach, a much-frequented bathing-resort, is on the S. coast.

Great Shemogue (shem'-o-gwe'), or Bristol, a post-village of Westmoreland co., New Brunswick, 19 miles from Shediac.

Great Slave Lake, a large lake of Canada, lies between lat.  $60^{\circ} 40'$  and  $63^{\circ} N$ . and lon.  $108^{\circ} 30'$  and  $118^{\circ} 30' W$ . It is about 300 miles long and 50 miles wide at the broadest part. Area, about 10,100 sq. m. Its form is very irregular. It is partly supplied with water by the Great Slave and Hay rivers and other streams. The bulk of its surplus water is discharged through the Mackenzie River, which issues from its W. end. A part of it finds its way into Hudson Bay through the Ark-I-Inik River. Elevation, 391 feet.

Great Slave River, of Canada, is formed by the Peace River after it is joined by the Stony River from Lake Athabasca. It enters Great Slave Lake on its S. side, by two mouths, near Fort Resolution. Total course, 800 miles. Fort Smith is the head of navigation from the sea.

Great South Bay, N.Y., is on the S. side of Long Island, about midway between its E. and W. extremities, and is partly separated from the ocean by a long and narrow strip of land called Great South Beach.

Great Torrington, a municipal borough of Devonshire, England. Pop. in 1901, 3241.

Great Valley, or Killbuck, a post-village of Cattaraugus co., N.Y., in Great Valley township (town), on the Alleghany River and on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh R., 49 miles ESE. of Dunkirk. Pop. about 800; of the town in 1900, 1697.

Great Village, a maritime town of Nova Scotia, co. of Colchester, near the head of Cobequid Bay, 3 miles from Londonderry. It has a foundry, etc., with a shipping trade. Pop. about 600.

Great Works, a post-village of Penobscot co., Me., on the Penobscot River and on the Maine Central R., 11 miles above Bangor. It has manufactures of lumber and chemical fibre. Pop. about 600.

Great Yarmouth, England. See YARMOUTH.

Greibenstein, grä'ben-stine', a town of Prussia, in Hesse-Nassau, 11 miles NNW. of Cassel. Pop. about 2000.

Grebile, grë'b'l, a post-village of Lebanon co., Pa., about 25 miles W. by N. of Reading.

Grecian Archipelago. See ÆGEAN SEA.

Greece (Gr. Ἑλλάς, Hellas; L. Græcia), a kingdom of southern Europe, occupying the extremity of the easternmost of the three great peninsulas of the continent, the Balkan Peninsula. It is situated between lat.  $36^{\circ}$  and  $46^{\circ} N$ . and lon.  $19^{\circ}$  and  $26^{\circ} E$ . (including the islands); bounded N. by European Turkey (Macedonia), W. by European Turkey (Epirus), from which it is separated by the Arta, and the Ionian Sea, S. by the Mediterranean, and E. by the Ægean Sea. Area, 25,014 sq. m. It is composed of a continental portion, which comprises Hellas in the N. and the peninsula of the Morea (anc. Peloponnesus) in the S., and of an insular portion consisting of the islands in the Ægean Sea and the Ionian Islands. Hellas and the Morea are almost separated by the gulfs of Patras and Lepanto on the W. and the Gulf of Ægina (Saronic Gulf) on the E., the connecting strip of land, the Isthmus of Corinth, being in its narrowest part, where it is pierced by a ship-canal, only about 4 miles across.

The territory of Greece is nearly all mountainous, the western portion of Hellas being occupied by prolongations and spurs of the Dinaric Alps, which are continued into the Ionian Islands and through the Morea, whence they are deflected in the direction of Asia Minor. Near the S. extremity of the Morea is Mount Taygetus (or St. Elias), 7910 feet in altitude. Running in a measure parallel with this chain is the range of the Pindus, which enters on the N. from Turkey, divides northern Greece into two nearly equal sections (an eastern and a western), and one of whose arms, Mount Othrys, forms the greater part of the S. boundary of Thessaly. In the Parnassian branch of the Pindus is Mount Parnassus (or Likeri), 8070 feet, the culminating point of the kingdom. The heart of the Morea is largely of a ruggedly wild plateau character, with deep ravines and valleys and barren limestone plains. The coasts are elevated, irregular, and deeply indented; the principal gulfs are those of Arta, Volo, Patras, Lepanto (or Corinth), Ægina, Nauplia, Kolokythia, Koron (or Messenia), and Arcadia. Chief capes are Marathon, Colonna (or Sunium), and Skrophia, all in Attica, and Skillo, Malia, Matapan, Gallo, and Klarentza, in the Morea. Off the W. coast are the Ionian Islands. The large island of Euboea lies along the NE. side of the main-land, from which it is separated by a long narrow channel, called in its narrowest part Euripus; the other islands are mainly scattered over the Ægean Sea in the two groups of the Cyclades and the northern Sporades. Most of the Grecian islands appear to be disrupted parts of the main-land, tectonic dislocations having brought about breakages of various kinds. The region has been frequently visited by earthquakes. Volcanic phenomena are most active in the Santorin group of islets. Greece has numerous streams, but they are mostly rapid and unfit for navigation, and the greater number not permanent. The principal are, in Hellas, the Aspropotamo (anc. Achelous), rising in Turkey, an affluent of the Ionian Sea; the Salamvria (Peneus), which flows into the Gulf of Saloniki; the Phidaris, which flows S. to the Gulf of Patras; the Hellada (Sperchius), an affluent of the Gulf of Lamia; and the Cephissus, which flows S. to the Gulf of Ægina. The chief rivers in the Morea are the Ruphia (Alpheus), in the W., and the Eurotas (Iri), in the S. The extensive lake of Topolias (anc. Copais), in Boeotia, has been recently drained. Caverns, sinks, and underground "pipes" or water-passages (catabothra) are numerous in the limestone regions.

The climate is temperate and generally healthy, except in some parts of the coasts. The summers, during which the vegetation of the lowlands in greater part withers, are hot and almost rainless. In some of the interior valleys the temperature not infrequently rises to  $100^{\circ}$ - $105^{\circ}$ , and even higher; at Athens the extreme is  $106^{\circ}$ . Winter is marked by rain in the plains and snow in the mountains; the extreme of lowland cold is about  $8^{\circ}$ . The vegetable products vary according to the elevation of the soil. The olive, vine, fig, currant-grape, melon, rice, cotton, orange, citron, and pomegranate thrive on the coasts and in districts situated at an elevation of 1000 feet, where also the myrtle, mastic, and plane-tree flourish. The vegetation of the plains is composed in greater part of evergreen shrubs, with occasional woods of fir and oak. Above 6000 feet in elevation the mountains are in great part covered with pine forests. Agriculture is neglected, only one-seventh of the area being under cultivation. The annual currant crop is about 150,000 tons; the crop of valonia, the acorn-cup of a species of oak used in tanning, was, in 1901, 5400 tons. The annual wheat product is about 7,000,000 bushels; barley, 3,000,000 bushels; and rye, 1,000,000 bushels. The principal domestic animals are sheep and goats; bees are raised. The wild animals include the stag, roebuck, fallow-deer, bear, fox, jackal, wild-boar, ibex, and hare; and it would appear that during the Roman period even the lion (possibly, also the hyena) was found among the mountain fastnesses. The bird-fauna is largely developed and includes many forms that are migrant from the African continent. The lake-borders and swamps teem with bird-life, swans, ducks and geese, pelicans, gulls, snipe, etc. Other birds are various herons, partridges, the spoon-bill, lammergeier, thrushes, and nightingale.

The mineral wealth of Greece is still largely undeveloped, although much ore has from time to time been extracted. The deposits of Laurium (see BREASTERIA), a place famed in antiquity for its yield of silver, are now worked for manganese, cadmium, iron, lead and silver, the manganese-iron product in 1902 having been about 250,000 tons. Sulphur is found on Milo and in some of the volcanic islands. Lignite occurs at a number of localities, as do likewise gypsum, barytes, salt, and magnesites. The marbles of Greece have long been famous.

Greece has few manufactures, properly so called, but silks, cottons, woollens, chemicals, iron-ware, pottery, paper, soaps, leather, and beet-sugar are produced for domestic use and to some extent for export. Ship-building is carried on in a minor way. There were, in 1904, 646 miles of railroad in operation and about 300 miles were in course of construction. The chief resource of the inhabitants has always been in maritime commerce. The principal ports are Athens (the Piræus), Patras, Hydra, Corfu, Nauplia, Hermopolis (Syra), Volo, and Kalamata. The exports are currants, valonia, wine, cotton and cotton yarn, olive-oil, tobacco, figs, sponges, emery, metals, ores, etc. Greece is divided into 26 nomarchies,—viz., Arta, Trikala, Karditsa, and Larissa, in northern Hellas; Euboea, Thessaly and Phthiotis, in middle Hellas; Magnesia (eastern Hellas and the northern Sporades); Acarnania and Ætolia (one nomarchy), Phocis, Boeotia, and Attica, in southern Hellas; Achaia and Corinthia, in the N. of the Morea; Argolis, in the E. of the Morea; Laconia, in the S. of the Morea; Argolis, in the S. of the Morea; Triphylia and Elis, in the W. of the Morea; Arcadia, in the central part of the Morea; Buboea, the Cyclades, Corfu (Kerkyra), Leukas, Cephalonia (Kephallenia), and Zante (Zacynthos), embracing most of the islands. The population of Greece in 1896 was 2,433,806, or 97 to the square mile. About nine-tenths of the inhabitants are Greeks, the most numerous foreign element being the Albanians. The inhabitants of Greece comprise only about one-third of the Greek people. The Greek population of European Turkey is not greatly inferior in numbers to that of the Greek kingdom. Asia Minor, the Turkish islands, and Crete contain together approximately as many Greeks as European Turkey. There is a considerable Greek population in Caucasus, Bulgaria, and other countries, including the United States.

The government of Greece is a constitutional monarchy. The Greek church is the established religion, to which nine-tenths of the people belong, and which acknowledges the king as its temporal head. The chief educational institution is the university at Athens. There is an effective and well-sustained system of public instruction. The principal towns (with populations in 1896) are as follows: Athens, the capital (pop. 111,496); Piræus, 42,169; Patras, 37,953; Trikala, 21,149; Corfu, 17,918; Hermoupolis, Volo, Larissa, and Zante.

From the remotest historic times Greece was the scene of events of the greatest significance and interest,—events which made it the cradle of European civilisation. Among the principal facts, incidents, and landmarks of ancient Greek history are: The period of Mycenaean civilisation (including the Heroic Age, as sung by the poets), previous to 1000 B.C.; establishment of the Dorians in the Peloponnese, according to the common account, about 1100 B.C.; composition of the Homeric poems (marking the development of Greek civilisation in Asia Minor), between 1000 and 800 B.C.; the moulding of Sparta into a military state by the Lycurgan legislation, about 850 B.C. (?); beginning of the Olympiads, 776 B.C.; establishment of Greek colonies along the shores of the Mediterranean and the Black Sea, about 750–650 B.C.; Sparta supplants Argos as the leading power in the Peloponnese, about 750 B.C.; legislation of Solon at Athens, about 694 B.C.; first Persian invasion, 490 B.C.; invasion of Xerxes, 480 B.C.; the hegemony passes from Sparta to Athens, 477 B.C.; Pericles at the head of the Athenian state, 444–429 B.C.; Peloponnesian War (Sparta becomes dominant), 431–404 B.C.; Theban hegemony, 371–362 B.C.; Macedonia imposes her yoke, 338 B.C.; Alexander the Great conquers the Persian Empire, 334–327 B.C.; rise of the Achaean League, about 280 B.C.; Roman conquest completed, 146 B.C.; Greece part of the Byzantine or Greek Empire, from A.D. 395. The age of the greatest development of Greek art, literature, and philosophy was the period from about 500 to about 300 B.C. After the Roman conquest the nobler elements of the Greek character were less conspicuous, and were gradually lost. The Byzantine civilisation was essentially Greek, though nominally Roman; but with the decline of the Byzantine power the Greek nationality entered upon a long period of lethargy, and the people were afterwards handed over from master to master without even the semblance of a struggle. In 1204 Greece was partitioned among the Latin conquerors of Constantinople. These western invaders established the principality of Achaia and the duchy of Athens. The Turks put an end to the Byzantine Empire in 1453, and a few years later were masters of Greece. A period of the grossest misrule and oppression followed. At last, in 1821, the Greeks declared their determination to be free. A protracted struggle took place, but the issue was still doubtful, when foreign powers interfered and compelled the Turks, in 1829, to acknowledge Greece as an independent state. A royal government was instituted in 1832. The Ionian Islands were incorporated in the Greek kingdom in 1863–64. In 1881 the Grecian dominions were enlarged at the expense of Turkey. In 1897 Greece, having resolved to annex the island of Crete, where the Christians had taken up arms against the Mohammedans, engaged in a war with Turkey, which ended disastrously.

Greece, a post-village of Monroe co., N.Y., in Greece township (town), 5 miles NW. of Rochester. Pop. of the town in 1900, 5679; of the village, 200.

Greece City, a post-village of Butler co., Pa., about 8 miles N. by E. of Butler. Pop. about 100.

Greeding, grā'ding, a town of Bavaria, 31 miles SSE. of Nuremberg. Pop. about 1000.

Greeley, a county in the W. part of Kansas, bordering on Colorado, has an area of 730 sq. m. Capital, Tribune. Pop. in 1890, 1264; in 1900, 493.

Greeley, a county in the central part of Nebraska, has an area of 580 sq. m. It is intersected by the North Loup River. Capital, Greeley. Pop. in 1890, 4899; in 1900, 5951.

Greeley, a banking city, capital of Weld co., Colo., on the Cache la Poudre River, 52 miles NNE. of Denver, on the Union Pacific and the Colorado and Southern Rrs. It is situated in a fertile valley and has a delightful climate. It has a state normal school, flour-, lumber-, beet-sugar, and coal-industries. Pop. in 1900, 3023. Elevation, 4635 feet.

Greenland (Dan. Grønland, grün'land), an extensive region NE. of North America, after Australia the largest insular land-mass of the globe, extending from Cape Farewell in the south, in lat.  $59^{\circ} 45' N$ ., to the Peary Channel, which separates it from some closely adjoining land-masses still farther north, in about lat.  $82^{\circ}-83^{\circ}$ . The NE. apex of Greenland proper is Independence Bay, in lat.  $81^{\circ} 37'$ ; the extreme northern point of the outlying land-masses (Hasen, Melville, and Heilprin Lands), which are structurally a part of Greenland, is Cape Morris Jesup, lat.  $83^{\circ} 39'$ . Area, about 850,000 sq. m. Greenland is throughout most of its extent a mountainous country, with elevations rising from 2000 to 6000 feet and more above the sea, the rugged mountain-heights descending in abrupt falls to the ocean, and presenting a landscape closely similar to Norway and other parts of the Scandinavian peninsula. Deep and tortuous fjords, floating out thousands of icebergs—the debris of the descending glaciers—bright into the coast, extending inward in some cases to distances of 60-100 miles. The deep mountain-valleys of the interior have been obliterated by the accumulation through ages of drifting and fallen snow, which has built up the general level of the country beyond the mountain-crests themselves, so that the eye sees only a vast and uniform snow-mantle or "ice-cap," sweeping and undulating between elevations of 4000 and 8000 feet. This great inland ice is the feeding-basin of Greenland's thousands of glaciers, many of which are among the largest in the world. Seemingly the largest of all known glaciers is the Humboldt, in the NW., which discharges into Kane Basin and is thought to have an ice-front of 45-60 miles. Other well-known glaciers on the W. coast are the Petowik, Great Karaiak, and Jakobsbavn. The highest elevation thus far determined is Petermann Peak, near the E. coast, in about lat.  $73^{\circ} 45'$ , and seemingly 9000 feet in height. The most extensive indentations of the coast are the Shearard-Osborn Fjord, in the extreme NW.; Petermann Fjord, Kane Basin, Ingfield Gulf, Disko Bay, Scoresby Sound, and Franz-Josef Fjord, the last two on the E. coast.

While most of Greenland is eternally buried under snow and ice, much of the coast-strip is freed of its winter mantle during the summer months, June-September, and appears covered, where the soil admits of plant growth, with a profuse vegetation of shrubs, herbs, and mosses, which are mostly of an Arctic character. The flowering plants comprise species of saxifrage, poppy, anemone, ranunculus, draba, chickweed, starwort, crowberry, heath, bellwort, etc. These are found associated with the Arctic birch and willow, and in the S. with the alder and other arborescent shrubs. The total number of flowering plants of Greenland is about 400, many of which are found quite to the northernmost extremity of the land. In the central and southern parts the Danes have introduced a minor garden cultivation in the raising of the cabbage, cress, radish, celery, turnip, and potato.

The extremes of climate are well accentuated, the winter temperatures being of extreme severity, but in no way comparable to those of the "pole of cold" of Siberia. The temperature rarely falls over most of the region below  $-45^{\circ} F$ ., and the minimum recorded is  $-65^{\circ}$  to  $-60^{\circ}$ . In summer, the shade temperature rises to  $60^{\circ}$  and more, and the sun temperature to about  $85^{\circ}$ .

The land fauna of Greenland is scanty, and the mammals are reduced to hardly more than six Arctic types (lemming, hare, fox, Polar bear, reindeer, and musk-ox, the last named extending its range to the northern boundary). Among the birds are falcons, the raven, snow-grouse, snow-bunting, and myriads of little auks that find refuge among the rock cliffs. The true inhabitants of Greenland are the Eskimos (Esquimaux), the pure stock of whom is now to be found only N. of Melville Bay. These Greenlanders, or "Arctic Highlanders," are about 300 in number, and extend their habitations from Cape York to about Etah. See ESQUIMAUX.

The greater part of Greenland seems to be constructed of crystalline schists and gneisses, of largely undetermined age. Extensive terrestrial or fluviot-terrestrial deposits containing an abundance of plant remains (beech, oak, walnut, poplar, willow, laurel, vine, sequoia, etc.), of both Cretaceous and Tertiary age, occur in the central region of the E. and W. coasts, indicating vast changes in the past climatic conditions of the land. Here are also found enormous trap-sheets, bearing evidence of vigorous volcanic activity during the same period of geological time. Politically Greenland, or that portion which is officially claimed by Denmark, is divided into two inspectorates,—the Southern Inspectorate, which extends to lat.  $67^{\circ} 20'$ , and the Northern Inspectorate, the northern limit of which has not yet been defined. Among the better-known seats of habitation are Upernivik (the most northern settlement of civilization of the globe), Godhavn (on the island of Disko, generally recognized as the capital of Greenland), Egedesminde, Sukkertoppen, Christianshaab, Jakobsbavn, Umanak, Godthaab, Frederikshaab, Julianshaab, and Ivigtut, the quarries of the last-named, near the S. extremity of the land, furnishing nearly all the cryolite of commerce. The ascertained population of Greenland does not exceed 12,000, mostly civilized Eskimos; the Europeans number less than 300. The trade of Greenland is a state monopoly, directed by the Royal Danish Greenland Company. The principal exports are whale and seal-oil, fox-, seal- and other skins, eiderdown, and cryolite. There are extensive fisheries of cod and haddock on the W. coast. The Norwegian, Erik the Red, and his followers were the first Europeans to set foot in Greenland, about 983, and soon after a little colony was established there. Davis rediscovered Greenland in 1585-87, but the old Norse colonists had disappeared, and only a few traces of their towns remain. The Danes obtained a footing on the W. coast in 1721, and shortly afterwards a number of mission stations were established. The more recent exploration of Greenland is associated with the expeditions of Nordenfjöld, Koldewey, Greeley, Nansen, Nathorst, Ryder, and Peary, the last named determining the insularity of the region (1892-1902).

Guadeloupe, gaw'də-loop' (Fr. pron. gwá'dloop'; Sp. Guadalupe), an island of the Lesser Antilles, one of the principal French colonies in the Atlantic Ocean, between lat. 15° 57' and 16° 31' N. It is composed of two distinct islands, separated by a narrow channel called Rivière Salée ("salt river"). The W. and larger portion, Guadeloupe proper, or Basse-Terre, is 27 miles long by about 15 miles broad. Basse-Terre is of volcanic formation and is traversed N. to S. by a ridge of mountain heights, with prominent morres and pitons. Among the culminating points are the Soufrière, a semi-active volcano, about 5000 feet high, La Grosse Montagne, Les Deux Mamelles, and Le Piton Bouillant, extinct or dormant volcanoes. Grande-Terre, the eastern portion, on the other hand, is generally flat, composed of coral, limestones, and oceanic detritus, with the highest elevation less than 500 feet. Guadeloupe is watered by small streams which become dry in summer. The principal are the Goyaves, Lamentin, and Lesarde. The climate is hot, but not notably unhealthy. Hurricanes are frequent and destructive. The soil is fertile and well cultivated, covered with fine forests in the mountainous, untilled parts, and with mangroves and mangrove trees on the marshy coast of Basse-Terre. The chief articles of cultivation are sugar, coffee, cacao, for export, and bananas, sweet potatoes, tobacco, manioc, etc., for home use. Rum and tafia are largely exported to France. The island is traversed by excellent roads, but modern inventions have made but little headway in the interior. The principal anchorages of Basse-Terre are the Bay of Mahault and the roads of Basse-Terre. Grande-Terre possesses two anchorages, Moule and Pointe-à-Pître; the latter, at the S. entrance to the Rivière Salée, is esteemed one of the best in the Antilles, and on it is situated the important town of Pointe-à-Pître. Guadeloupe, as a colony, has five dependencies, consisting of the minor islands Marie Galante, Désirade, Les Saintes, St. Bartholomew (Saint-Barthélemy), and part of St. Martin. Total area, 716 sq. m.; of Guadeloupe, 618. Pop. of the island in 1901, 182,112 (including 15,000 coolies); of the colony, about 265,000. The island is administered by a governor and is represented in the home government by 1 senator and 2 deputies. Capital, Basse-Terre. Guadeloupe was discovered by Columbus in 1493. It was taken possession of by the French in 1635, who kept it till 1769, when it was taken by the English. It was subsequently captured and recaptured several times by these nations, and was finally ceded to the French at the general peace in 1814.

Lat. 13° 45' to 17° 50' N.; lon. 93° 15' to 92° 12' W. Area, about 43,200 sq. m. Guatemala is, in general, exceedingly picturesque and beautiful, and, like the other states of Central America, it is distinguished by a luxuriant and varied vegetation. Except in the marshy forests near the NE. coast, the country is wholly mountainous, the main chain or cordillera traversing it from SE. to NW., at no great distance from the Pacific Ocean, sending off numerous branches towards the Atlantic Ocean, and forming a great plateau in the interior. This chain attains an elevation in the Sierra Cobix of upward of 11,500 feet. Along the southern slope of the main cordillera are a considerable number of volcanoes, several of which (Fuego, Pacaya, Santa Maria) are active. The most prominent summits are Tajumulco (13,900 ft.), Tacaná (13,300 ft.), Fuego (12,570 ft.), Agua, Santa Maria, and Atitlán. The latest eruption of the new cone of Santa Maria, in Oct., 1902, proved very destructive. Earthquakes have been at various times of a violent character and are of frequent occurrence. The one of April, 1902, which wrecked a large part of the town of Quetzaltenango, was of unusual severity. The state is watered by numerous streams, of which the Usumacinta, flowing NW. and forming part of the Mexican boundary, and the Motagua and the Polochic continued by the Dulce, both flowing NE. to the Bay of Honduras, and their tributaries, are the largest; but besides these there are many streams of comparatively short courses falling into the Pacific Ocean. There are, likewise, several lakes, the most important being Dulce, Amatitlán, Atitlán, and Petén, the last named about 30 miles long by 9 miles broad, near the frontiers of Yucatan. On the table-land the climate is mild and agreeable, but in more elevated situations the cold at times is considerable. The soil generally is of great fertility, producing maize and wheat of superior quality, excellent rice, and vegetables and tropical fruits in great variety. The most important cultivated products are coffee, sugar, tobacco, cacao, bananas, and indigo. Much rubber is also obtained. The value of the coffee exported in 1902 was $7,740,000, the greater part of the product going to Germany.

In the altos or high parts of the state sheep are raised, the wool of which is manufactured by the natives into a coarse twilled fabric called gera, which again is made into various articles of clothing, including long plaids called ponchos. The precious metals have thus far been found only in minor quantity, the more remunerative gold-workings being along the Motagua River. The total mileage of railways in operation is about 400. The chief executive of Guatemala is a president, who is elected for a term of six years. Capital, Guatemala, or New Guatemala (Guatemala la Nueva). Pop. in 1900, 1,647,300, of whom about 60 per cent. were pure Indians. The principal ports are Puerto Barrios and Livingston on the Atlantic Ocean, and San José, Ocos, and Champerico on the Pacific Ocean.

Guatemala, or Guatemala la Nueva, gwá-tá-má'lá lá noo-á-vá, called also Santiago de Guatemala, capital of the republic of Guatemala, is situated in a rich and spacious plain, at an elevation of 4850 feet, 106 miles WNW. of San Salvador. Lat. 14° 37' N.; lon. 90° 30' W. It is a handsome town, well supplied with water by long aqueducts on arches, and extends over a large space, the prevalence of earthquakes causing the houses to be built largely of one story. In the great square are situated the old vice-regal palace, most of the government offices, the cathedral, the archbishop's palace, many schools, barracks, and most of the principal shops. Guatemala is the seat of a university and of a polytechnic college, has a museum, public libraries, numerous churches and hospitals, a theatre, bull-ring, national palace, etc. The conventual buildings are now mostly appropriated to lay purposes. The inhabitants manufacture mullins, fine cotton yarn, silver articles, artificial flowers, and embroidery of high excellence. Guatemala is the centre of the trade of the entire republic. The building of the present city, which is the third capital of Guatemala (the site of the first being now known as Ciudad Vieja or Almalonga), was commenced in the year 1776, three years after the earthquake of 1773, which devastated Old Guatemala (Guatemala la Antigua), the second capital. Pop. in 1880, 55,728; in 1889, 65,796; in 1898, 74,000.

Guatemala, gwá-tá-má'la, a central department of Guatemala. It has the Rio Grande for its N. boundary and is intersected by its tributaries. A railroad traverses part of it and connects Guatemala, the capital, with the port of San José. Pop. about 150,000.

Guatemala la Antigua, gwá-tá-má'la lá án-tee'gwá (i.e., "Old Guatemala"), called also Santiago de Caballeros, sán-tee-á'go dá ká-bál-yá'róce, lies 20 miles WSW. of the city of Guatemala, at the foot of the Volcán de Agua, and near the site of the earlier city, Guatemala la Vieja (Ciudad Vieja), which was overwhelmed by a discharge from the Volcán de Agua in 1541. Guatemala la Antigua was devastated by an earthquake in 1773 and was again partially destroyed in 1874. Pop. about 6500.

Guatiqué, a town of Colombia, in the department of Boyacá, about 12 miles SE. of Tunja. Pop. 6000.

Guayape, gwí-á-pá, a river of Honduras, with noted gold-washings. It is a branch of the Patuca.

Guayaquil, gwí-á-keel', a city and chief port of Ecuador, capital of the province of Guayas, on the W. bank of the river Guayas, 40 miles from its mouth. It is built mainly of wooden structures, on a low, flat region, and has dirty and badly paved streets. Yellow fever epidemics are not uncommon. The residences of the richer class, with the principal business houses, are in the new town, which is generally well laid out. Guayaquil is a bishop's see, and has numerous churches, a college, technical school, convents, and other institutions. The chief exports are cacao, Panama hats, hides, cotton, tobacco, rubber, calisaya and other barks, coffee, metals, etc. It is the seat of several manufacturing establishments and has large ship-yards. Pop. about 52,000. The city was largely destroyed by fire in Nov., 1896.

Guayaquil, Gulf of, an inlet of the Pacific Ocean, in Ecuador, mostly between lat. 2° and 4° S. and lon. 80° and 81° W. It receives the Guayas, Daule, and Tumbes rivers and contains the islands of Puna and Santa Clara.

Guayas, gwí-á, a province of Ecuador, on the W. coast, and occupying a large portion of the Pacific slope of that country. It is commercially the most important province of the republic. It is essentially lowland, and agriculture is the chief industry; cacao, coffee, sugar-cane, tobacco, and rice are raised. The natives manufacture "Panama" hats. The Galápagos Islands were attached administratively to Guayas province in 1885. Area, 11,504 sq. m. Capital, Guayaquil. Pop. in 1893, 98,100.

Guaymas, gwí-más, a seaport of Mexico, state of Sonora, on the Gulf of California, at the mouth of the Rio de Guaymas, 230 miles S. of Nogales, with which it is connected by rail. Lat. 27° 58' N.; lon. 110° 58' W. Its harbor is one of the best on the W. coast of Mexico, and it has an active trade, exporting gold, silver, hides, and pearls. Pop. in 1900, 8648.

Gubbio, goob'be-o (anc. Iguvium), a city of central Italy, province of Perugia, 27 miles S. of Urbino. It is beautifully situated on the slope of the Apennines, and has a quaint, mediæval appearance. It is a bishop's see. The chief edifices are the mediæval cathedral, a massive communal palace of the fourteenth century, and numerous churches and convents. Near it, among the ruins of a temple of Jupiter Apenninus, in 1444, were discovered the famous Etruscan tables,—plates of bronze inscribed with Umbrian and primitive Latin characters. The town has valuable art-collections. Gubbio was formerly famous for its manufactures of majolica, and this branch of industry is still carried on. Pop. of the commune in 1901, 26,320, of whom about one-fourth resided in the town.

Guben, goo'bén, a walled town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, on the Neisse, 28 miles SSE. of Frankfurt-on-the-Oder. It has manufactures of woollen and linen stuffs, yarn, cloths, hats, machines, earthenware, dolls, etc. Pop. in 1900, 33,122.

Guernica, gheer-nee'ka, a town of Spain, province of Biscay, 17 miles ENE. of Bilbao. Pop. in 1900, 3250.

Guernsey, gheer-n'se (anc. Sar-nia), the second in size of the Channel Islands, 51 miles S. of Portland, English coast, and 15 miles WNW. of Jersey. Area, about 25 sq. m. The coast-line is deeply indented with bays, and in the S. rises in rugged cliffs to a height of 270 feet. The soil is very fertile. The climate is moist, but healthy, and so mild that oranges, melons, figs, myrtles, and the Guernsey lily flourish luxuriantly. Wheat, barley, various vegetables, and apples for the making of cider are extensively cultivated. The island is noted for its breed of cows, which are larger and more valued than even those of Alderney. Steamers ply between Guernsey and London, Southampton, Plymouth, Weymouth, Alderney and Sark, Cherbourg, and Saint-Malo. St. Peter-le-Port, on the SE. coast, is the capital, and, except St. Sampson, is the only town in the island, which is mostly studded with scattered houses or cottages embosomed in orchards. The natives of the lower orders speak the old Norman French. The island is under a lieutenant-governor, who represents the sovereign in the assembly of the states, which is a kind of local parliament. Guernsey is defended by strong fortifications and has a well-organized militia. Mean temperature for the month of February, 43°; for July, 60.5°. The annual rainfall is 38 inches. Pop. in 1901, including Herm and Jethou, 40,477.

Guhrau, goo'rów, a town of Prussian Silesia, 44 miles NNW. of Breslau. Pop. in 1900, 4844.

Guiana, Guyana, ghe-á'ná, or Guayana, gwí-á'ná, a region of South America, in its narrowest sense the territory of British, Dutch, and French Guiana (each described under its individual head), but in a wider sense including also a large section of Venezuela and that part of Brazil which lies N. of the Amazon and the Rio Negro. It has as a nucleus the Sierra Parime, a system of mountains of low elevation and known to contain deposits of gold. Guiana has a humid climate and a fertile soil; but much of its interior, which is a vast forest-land, remains almost unexplored.

Guiana (ghe-á'ná), British, a territory on the N. coast of South America, belonging to Great Britain, and considered to extend from the mouth of the Orinoco, 5° 45' N. lat., as far southward as lat. 0° 50' N., and from lon. 56° 30' to 61° 50' W. (which includes some of the territory claimed by Venezuela and involved in the discussion of the Schomburgk Line). It has on the E. Dutch Guiana, on the S. Brazil, and on the W. Venezuela. Area, 104,000 sq. m. The surface of the country near the ocean is a rich alluvial flat, extending in mud banks into the sea and inland from 10 to 40 miles, then ascending by successive terraces to the Sierras Pacaraima and Acaai, on the SW. and W. frontiers; while on the W. boundary Roraima rises to an elevation of about 8500 feet. The principal rivers are the Cayuni, Masaruni, Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice, and Corentyn, the last forming the E. border. On the low grounds the climate is unhealthy. Dense forests clothe the interior. There are two rainy seasons on the coast,—one, from December to February (lesser rains continuing until May), and another from May till the end of July. In the interior there is only one rainy season,—from April till the middle of August. The temperature ranges from 75° to 90°; mean temperature of the year, 81°. The vegetation is luxuriant. Rice, sugar-cane, maize, wheat, cacao, vanilla, tobacco, and cinnamon are raised. The exports consist chiefly of sugar, rum, molasses, balatta, timber, shingles, gold, and diamonds. Gold-mining was actively begun in 1886, since which time the product has amounted to several millions of pounds sterling. In 1900-01 the yield of the precious metal was 108,522 ounces; in 1902-03, 104,525 ounces. Diamonds valued at $12,876 were exported in the year 1900-01; in 1902-03 the product was valued at £20,356. The government is vested in a governor, an executive council, a legislative body called the Court of Policy, and the Combined Court (made up of the Court of Policy and a number of financial representatives elected by the people). The colony is divided into the counties of Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo. There are about 100 miles of operating railway. Chief towns, Georgetown (the capital) and New Amsterdam. Pop. in 1881, 252,186; in 1891, 284,887; in 1900, 294,943, of whom 105,500 were East Indians (chiefly coolies), 99,700 negroes, and 2600 Europeans. This region was wrested by the British from the Dutch at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Guiana (ghe-á'ná), Dutch, also known as Surinam, a Dutch colony, having British Guiana on the W., French Guiana on the E., and separated from Brazil on the S. by the Acaai range (or more specifically the Tumao-Humao mountains), lying between lat. 2° and 6° N. and lon. 54° and 57° 40' W. The boundaries on the W. and E. are formed by the Corentyn and Maroni rivers, respectively. Area, about 46,000 sq. m. Its physical character, climate, and productions are very nearly the same as those of British Guiana. A range of mangrove-covered swamps, mud-banks, and sand-hills extends along the coast, immediately behind which woody screen, and along the banks of the Surinam, lie the plantations. Nine-tenths of the interior is unsettled, consisting of moist plains and dense forests intersected by brimming rivers. The hilly districts in the interior are still largely uncultivated. The capital, Paramaribo, stands on the Surinam, 10 miles from its mouth. The laws, language, coinage, weights, and measures are all Dutch. The colony is divided into 16 districts and numerous communes, and the superior executive authority is vested in a council, consisting of a governor, a vice-president, and three other members, all nominated by the Dutch sovereign. All religious persuasions are tolerated. The chief productions of the country are sugar, cacao, bananas, coffee, rice, and maize. Rum and molasses are extensively manufactured. There are considerable gold washings, and latterly crushing plants have been introduced. Pop. in 1901, 70,607, exclusive of the negroes inhabiting the forests.

Guiana (ghe-á'ná), French (Fr. Guyane Française, ghee-á'n' frón'sá's'), a French colony in South America, the easternmost division of Guiana, its coast-line extending from the river Maroni (or Marowynne) on the W. to the river Oyapok on the E., which separates it from Brazil, between lat. 2° and 5° 45' N. and lon. 51° 30' and 56° 10' W. Area, 30,450 sq. m. This territory much resembles the other Guianas in its physical features and climate. The articles of export are gold, coffee, cacao, sugar, rum, cabinet-woods, annatto, skins, india-rubber, vanilla, pepper, cloves, cinnamon, phosphates, etc. The coast is low, consisting of a flat alluvial tract, of great fertility, in some places marshy and covered with thick forests of mangroves. The highlands in the interior, the soil consisting of clay mixed with gold-bearing granitic sand, are also fertile; and the whole country is exceedingly well watered, the principal streams being the Mana, Sinnimari, Ouya, and Approuague.

The Tumac-Humac mountains and their continuations form the southern boundary. There is as yet little agriculture in the colony, less than 9000 acres being under cultivation. Rice, maize, coffee, cacao, sugar, and indigo are grown in small quantities. Of late nearly every other industry has been superseded by that of gold-washing, an occupation which has proved very profitable. In 1902 the gold export amounted to 149,360 ounces.

The territory includes the island of Cayenne, on which is situated Cayenne, the capital of the colony. The government is vested in a governor, assisted by a privy council of 7 members, and a colonial council-general composed of 16 members. The colony is represented in the French parliament by one deputy.

The French first settled in Cayenne in the year 1664. In 1763 the French government, with the view of improving and otherwise increasing the importance of the colony, sent out 12,000 emigrants; but, no arrangements having been made for their reception or subsequent disposal, they nearly all perished from exposure to the climate. In 1809 the colony was captured by the forces of the British and Portuguese and restored to France at the peace of Paris in 1814. This colony serves as a place of banishment for criminals and political offenders. The boundary with Brasil, which was for a long time in dispute, was finally settled by the Swiss Court of Arbitration in Dec., 1900. Pop. in 1901, 32,908, of whom 4097 were labor convicts.

Gravenhage*, s'grá'ven-hâ'geh; Ger. Haag, há; Fr. La Haye, lá á; It. L'Aja, lá'yá), the capital of the Netherlands and of the province of South Holland, situated in a (formerly wooded) plain, 3 miles from the North Sea, 14 miles NW. of Rotterdam and 33 miles SW. of Amsterdam. Lat. 52° 4' 20" N.; lon. 4° 18' 40" E. Pop. in 1863, 84,615; in 1890, 160,531; in 1902, 218,029. Mean temperature of the year, 53° F.; winter, 38.2°; summer, 65.5°. It is a handsome town, with little commerce or manufactures, and many of its streets are intersected by canals, bordered with rows of trees. The principal edifices are in the quarter of the Vyverberg and Plein, in the fashionable northern section of the city, which is the terminus of the electric railway to Scheveningen, Holland's most famous sea-side resort. The most renowned institution of the city is the royal picture-gallery, contained in the Mauritshuis, which possesses many of the rarest specimens of Dutch art, among them the masterpieces of Rembrandt. A minor collection of paintings, antiquities, etc., is contained in the Municipal Museum. The royal palace is an unpretentious edifice. In front of it is the equestrian statue of William I. of Orange. The Binnenhof, appropriated to the states assembly and the chief government offices, comprises a portion of the residence of the ancient counts of Holland. The town has numerous schools, private galleries of art, a royal theater, etc., and is the seat of many learned associations. The royal library, founded in 1706, contains 400,000 volumes. The town-hall, completed in 1566, and several times extended, is one of the most picturesque buildings of the city. The principal churches are the Groote Kerk (church of St. James) and the Nieuwe Kerk. A fine road, called the Voorhout, leads N. to the Bosch, a wooded park with a suburban royal seat; and 1½ miles SE. of The Hague stood the castle of Ryswick, memorable for the treaty signed there in 1697. A large and imposing National Monument was unveiled in the city in 1860. The industries of The Hague are principally in goldsmiths' and silversmiths' work, faience, iron, brass, and copper.

'S Gravenhage signifies literally "the count's hedge, grove, or wood," and The Hague appears to have owed its origin to a hunting-seat of the counts of Holland, situated in a wood. This, however, became a palace as early as 1256, and around it many other houses were soon erected. But the city has risen into importance chiefly since the beginning of the nineteenth century, mainly through having been made the residence of the court and the seat of government.

The axial, or Cibao, range attains in the Pico del Yaqui an elevation of 9700 feet. The loftiest summit of the land, the Loma Tina, 10,300 ft., lies WNW. of the city of Santo Domingo. The mountains are generally clothed with luxuriant and almost impenetrable forests, and are divided off by deep and long valleys. The principal rivers have their sources in the moist, forested region of the Cibao range, and are the Artibonite, flowing W. and discharging into the Bay of Gonaves; the Yaqui del Norte, flowing NW. and discharging into Manzanillo Bay; the Juna, flowing E. into the Bay of Samaná; and the San Juan, or Yaqui del Sur, flowing S. into Barahona Bay. Several large lakes occupy the southwestern part of the island, and in their longitudinal disposition define the inner boundary of the long southwestern peninsula which lies south of the Bay of Gonaves. The climate is tropical, and on the plains very unhealthy for Europeans. There are but two seasons: the rainy season, May to October or December, and the dry season; the spring, April to June, is the finest time of the year. Hurriceans are common, especially in August and September. The soil is highly fertile, and a great part of the island is covered with dense forests of mahogany, iron-wood, logwood, cedar, and other valuable timber trees. The principal articles exported are mahogany, logwood, lignum-vitæ, coffee, cotton, tobacco, cacao, and sugar. Silver, platinum, tin, manganese, antimony, iron, and rock-salt are found in the island, but these minerals are little exploited.

The island was discovered by Columbus, Dec. 8, 1492; and on its coast was planted the first permanent colony established by Europeans in the Western Hemisphere, the town of Santo Domingo being founded in 1496. The Indians were soon exterminated by their greedy task-masters, and negro slaves took their place. The island was long an important possession of Spain. In the seventeenth century Frenchmen began to settle on its coast, and in the treaty of Ryswick, in 1697, the western part of the island was ceded to France. The French colony grew to be very prosperous, but the great mass of the inhabitants were slaves. In 1791 a fierce insurrection of the negroes broke out in the colony, which was rent at the same time by war between the whites and mulattoes. The Spaniards and English assailed the power of France. In 1793 the French Convention decreed the emancipation of the slaves. The country was rescued from anarchy and from its foreign invaders by the abilities of the negro leader Toussaint l'Ouverture, who was made military commander of the colony, increased by the annexation of the Spanish portion of the island in 1795, and who ultimately ruled as dictator over the whole island. In 1802 Bonaparte made war on Toussaint l'Ouverture, who was seized and carried to France. The blacks rose and expelled the French in 1803. After the brief imperial rule of Dessalines (1804-6) there were divisions and wars in the island. In 1844 the Republic of Santo Domingo was constituted. The history of the two states of Haiti and Santo Domingo has been characterized by revolution, usurpation, and anarchy. See HAITI, REPUBLIC OF, and SANTO DOMINGO.

Haiti, Republic of, a state occupying the western or what is generally known as the French division of the island of Haiti. (See HAITI.) Area about 10,750 sq. m. Pop., according to an ecclesiastical census, in 1901, 1,294,000. It is estimated that about nine-tenths of the inhabitants are blacks. The remainder are mainly mulattoes, the pure whites being very few. The industries are mainly agricultural, the most important cultivated product being coffee, of which the quantity exported in 1900 was 72,000,000 pounds. Cacao and cotton are also grown. Other important articles of export are logwood, various hard timbers, goat-skins, and wax. The mineral resources are those of the island generally, but mining is little prosecuted. Capital, Port-au-Prince. Other important towns are Cape Haytien, Les Cayes, Gonaïves, and Port-de-Paix. The administration of the republic is by a president, elected for 7 years, and two legislative chambers. The present constitution was adopted in 1899. The language of the country is French. The religion of the people is nominally Roman Catholic, but the lower classes are steeped in the superstitions and practices of voodoo.

Hamburg, hâm'bûrg (Ger. pron. hâm'bôôse; L. Hamburgum), a republic and city of the German Empire. The free city of Hamburg is situated on the right bank of the Elbe, about 70 miles from its mouth. Lat. of the observatory, 53° 33' 7" N.; lon. 9° 58' 28" E. It is the largest of the three Hanseatic towns, the greatest commercial city of the continent of Europe, and after London, Liverpool, and New York the greatest seat of maritime trade in the world. It consists of an old and a new town, with St. Pauli and other villages and suburbs, largely enclosed by planted walks on the site of its former fortifications, and intersected by canals and by branches of the Alster river. The river forms a large basin (Aussen-Alster) outside of the town and a smaller inner basin (the Binnen-Alster), the latter flanked with palatial hotels and residences and with shaded promenades forming the chief attraction of the city and one of the most beautiful spots in the interior of any city. The port or harbor, which constitutes in greater part a free harbor or bonded warehouse district, is one of the most animated of the world, and its quays, which extend to Altona, give accommodation to several hundred sea-going vessels, besides a much larger number of minor craft. Steamers ply to nearly all parts of the globe. Among the more important or striking ecclesiastical, educational, and other edifices and institutions of the city are the churches of St. Peter and St. Michael (the latter with a tower 426 feet in height and accommodating 4000 people), the exchange (with a commercial library of 100,000 volumes), the new town-hall (Rathaus), Johanneum (with a college and the city library of 600,000 volumes), Kunsthalle or galleries of paintings, natural history museum, museum of industrial art, and the Weber gallery of paintings. The streets and squares of the city are largely adorned with statues and fountains. Hamburg possesses one of the finest zoological gardens of Europe. In 1842 a great conflagration destroyed St. Nicholas church and a large section of the city.

The chief articles of the commerce of Hamburg are coffee, sugar, spirits, wine and malted liquors, grain, butter, tobacco, leather, smoked fish, hides, and fancy articles. The city has extensive iron- and boiler-works, ship-yards, anchor- and iron-forges, cotton-mills, printing and dyeing establishments, refineries, breweries, and manufactories of pianos, chemicals, locomotives, etc. The city has extensive railway communication with the interior of the country. The state of Hamburg has an area of 157 sq. m. and is composed of the city and the district immediately around it, the districts of Bergedorf, Geestlande, Marschlande, and Ritsbüttel, with Vierländen, the isle of Neuwerk, some islands in the Elbe, and some detached portions of territory, enclosed by Prussian districts. The Elbe, also, between Hamburg and the sea, is entirely under the jurisdiction of the state. The surface is level and is watered by the Elbe, Alster, and Bille: the Vierländen and marsh-lands in the river are very productive, being in great part appropriated to fruit- and market-gardens. The government is vested in a senate of 18 members and a house of burgesses consisting of 160 citizens. Previous to 1888, Hamburg was not included in the German customs union. Part of the port has been reserved as a free port, and the so-called New Harbor at Cuxhaven has also been declared a free port. The population of the city in 1880 was 289,859; in 1890, 323,923, with the surrounding communes, about 570,000; and in 1900, 705,738. About the beginning of the ninth century Charlemagne built a castle at Hamburg as a defence against the Slavs. The place soon rose to importance. In the middle of the thirteenth century Hamburg united with Lübeck and Bremen in establishing the Hanseatic League. It rose to be a powerful republic, with the privileges of a free imperial city. In the formation of the German Confederation in 1815, Hamburg, which for some years had belonged to France, was recognised as a free city. In 1871 it became a member of the new empire.

The population is over 100,000, mostly Annamese, many of whom profess Christianity. Ha-noi has belonged to France since 1882.

Han'over (Ger. Hanno'ver), a province of Prussia, bounded N. by the North Sea and by Holstein, the territory of Hamburg, and Lauenburg, from all of which it is separated by the Elbe, NE. by Mecklenburg-Schwerin, E. by Prussian Saxony and Brunswick, S. by Prussian Saxony, Hesse-Nassau, and Westphalia, and W. by the Netherlands. Its territories almost enclose those of the grand-duchy of Oldenburg and of Bremen and surround part of Brunswick. It is of very irregular shape and is divided into several distinct portions. There is a range of sandy islands lining the coast. Area, 14,869 sq. m.

The surface in the SE. is covered by the Hars Mountains, some of whose summits here attain a height of more than 3000 feet; but the rest of the country belongs to the W. part of the great plain which stretches E. across Prussia and Russia. In Hanover this plain subsides into a monotonous flat, with a gentle slope towards the North Sea. In the E. is the Lüneburg Heath. The province is drained by the Elbe, Weser, and Ems. The Hars Mountains are rich in minerals, which have long been worked. They produce iron, lead, copper, and silver. Other important mineral products of Hanover are coal and salt.

In the low alluvial flats the soil is remarkably rich, and here are large stretches of meadow and pasture. On more elevated ground the soil to a great extent is so poor as often to be left in a state of nature with its covering of heath or of deep beds of peat. But there are extensive tracts of arable land, amounting to one-third of the whole surface. All kinds of grain are cultivated. Other important crops are rape, flax, hops, tobacco, and potatoes. Live-stock is plentiful. Poultry also, particularly geese, are reared in vast numbers, and the rearing of bees is extensively carried on upon the moors. The population of the province in 1900 was 2,590,939. The great majority of the inhabitants are Protestants. The northwestern corner of Hanover is East Friesland, where the Frisian language is still heard. The capital of the province is Hanover. The principal seat of learning is the University of Göttingen.

Ernest Augustus, a prince of the dual house of Brunswick-Lüneburg, was raised to the dignity of elector of Hanover in 1692. He was the husband of Sophia, granddaughter of James I., and their son George I. inaugurated the Hanoverian dynasty in England in 1714. In 1814 the Congress of Vienna raised Hanover to the rank of a kingdom. On the accession of Queen Victoria to the crown of England the Salic law placed the Hanoverian crown on the head of the nearest male heir, Ernest Augustus, duke of Cumberland. He died in 1851 and was succeeded by his son, George V. In 1866 the Hanoverians took the Austrian side in the war with Prussia, in consequence of which the Prussians dethroned the king and annexed the country.

Hanover, a city of Prussia, capital of the province of Hanover, on the Leine, an affluent of the Weser, 83 miles S. by W. of Hamburg. Lat. 52° 22' 16" N.; lon. 9° 44' 40" E. Railways connect it with the principal North German towns. It is built on a sandy plain, enclosed by planted walks, and divided by the river (here crossed by several bridges) into an old and a new town (with which have been incorporated a number of suburbs), the latter regularly laid out, with many stately edifices and a number of beautiful parks. On the Waterlooplats is the Waterloo Column, 154 feet in height, erected to the Hanoverians who fell at Waterloo. The principal edifices and institutions are the royal palace, the palace of King Ernest Augustus, the old town-hall, several interesting churches, opera-house, arsenal, a splendid theatre, the Hanover Provincial Museum (with collections of paintings and objects of natural history), the Kestner Museum, the polytechnic institute (one of the leading institutions of its kind in Germany), royal and provincial library (with about 200,000 volumes and valuable manuscripts), a veterinary college, and a school of industrial art. It has manufactures of oil-cloth, gold and silver articles, carpets, lacquered wares, chicory, etc., besides machinery, iron bridges, pianos, chemicals and paints, malted and other liquors, etc. About half a mile from the city is a royal country residence with a fine picture-gallery, and 1 mile distant is the old palace of Herrenhausen, the favorite residence of George I., II., and V. The city has many public monuments. Hanover has increased rapidly in population since the annexation to Prussia. Pop. in 1900, 235,649.

Hanse (hansas) Towns, called also the Hansa (hân'sâ) and Hansent'ic League, a celebrated commercial confederacy, which derived its name from the ancient German word Hansa, used in the sense of an "association for mutual support." In the Middle Ages, Hamburg, Lübeck, and afterwards Brunswick, Danzig, Cologne, Bremen, and a great number of other towns, entered into an alliance in order to protect their commerce against the pirates who infested the seas bordering on Germany and to safeguard their interests in general. The number of Hanse towns composing the league fluctuated; at one time it amounted to about 85, among which were Bergen, in Norway, and such a far inland town as Cracow. Their alliance was coveted and their hostility feared by the greatest powers. Several kings were defeated and one (Magnus of Sweden) was deposed by them. Lübeck was the place of assemblage. Lat. 41° 45' 59" N.; lon. 72° 40' 45" W. Most of the residence portion is considerably elevated above the river-level and the surface is somewhat broken. The principal streets are Main, which extends through the heart of the city and on which are many public buildings and churches; State Street, largely given over to the wholesale business; and Asylum Street. The city's most attractive feature is Bushnell Park, which, including the former site of Trinity College, embraces a tract of about 50 acres and contains, upon a commanding eminence, the capitol or state-house, built of white marble in the modern Gothic style. This building is 295 feet long, 189 ft. deep, and 256 ft. in height, and was completed for occupancy in 1878 at a cost of $2,500,000. Other noteworthy edifices and institutions are Trinity College buildings, in the SW. part of the city; the Memorial Arch, at one of the park entrances; St. Joseph's Cathedral, consecrated in 1892; Hooper Hall, the home of the Hartford Theological Seminary; the high-school, post-office, old state-house, Wadsworth Athenaeum (with a gallery of sculptures and paintings, library, and the collections of the Historical Society), the Case Memorial Library (with, in 1903, 81,500 volumes), public library (with about 90,000 volumes), state arsenal, etc. Trinity College (Episcopal), founded in 1823, had a library, in 1903, of 46,500 volumes. The American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, founded in 1816, is located here, also a retreat for the insane, a large hospital, old people's home, orphan-asylum, blind-asylum, and inebriate-asylum. Hartford is the see of a Roman Catholic bishop. Charter Oak Place marks the site where, in 1687, the charter of the state is said to have been temporarily concealed. More capital is employed in the insurance (life and fire) business in this city than in any other of its size in the United States, the assets of the united companies being over $160,000,000. The city's manufacturing industries give employment to several thousand men and women. Among the principal manufactures are those of fire-arms (revolvers, guns, etc.), steam-engines, boilers, bicycles, automobiles, sewing-machines, car-wheels, hardware, machinists' tools, carriages, silver-plated ware, typesetting machines, belting, hosiery and knitted-goods, envelopes, and pumps. Hartford is a central market for tobacco, which is the staple product of the fertile Connecticut Valley. It is the port of entry for the customs district of Hartford.

Hartford was settled in 1636-36 by emigrants from Massachusetts Bay. It was the capital of Connecticut until 1701, when New Haven became joint capital (the legislature holding its sessions alternately in the two towns), and since 1875 it has been again the sole capital. It was incorporated as a city in 1784. Pop. in 1830, 9789; in 1880, 42,553; in 1890, 53,230; in 1900, 79,850.

The coast has many playas, or beaches, and is indented by estuaries and bays. The orographic features of the interior are not well defined, but they are principally associated with the Sierra de los Orgaños. Havana has a number of small rivers and streams, notably the Almendares, Cojimar, and the San Antonio, which disappears underground, continuing its course through subterranean passages; the Ariguanabo is the principal lake. Mineral springs are found at Madruga. This province yields valuable timber, coffee, sugar, tobacco, rice and other cereals, vegetables, and fruit. The mineral resources include quartz, gold, silver, copper, iron, some coal, asphalt, rock-salt, and both black and white marble. Capital, Havana, which is also the capital of the island. Pop. in 1899, 424,804. The province includes the Isle of Pines.

Havana, hâ-vân' (Sp. Las Habana, lâ â-sâ'nâ, a seaport, capital of a province and of the island of Cuba, the most important commercial city of the West Indies, is situated on the W. side of a most capacious and beautiful harbor, in lat. (Morro Castle) 23° 9' 4" N., lon. 82° 22' W. The entrance to the harbor is defended by the Punta Castle, on the side of the city, and by Morro Castle, on the side opposite. Other strong fortifications defend the city and harbor. The old, or inner city, which was until 1863 surrounded by walls, is irregular, with narrow streets. The new quarters have fine promenades (orpasos) and squares, such as the central Plaza de Armas. The dwellings are generally low, with heavy walls and barred windows, in the Spanish style of architecture. The principal edifices of the city are the cathedral, governor's palace, the palace of the bishop, admiralty, general post-office, exchange, royal tobacco-factory, and the Casa Real de Beneficencia (a charitable institution). The city has numerous churches, asylums, convents and schools, a university, theological seminary, public library, museum of natural history, school of painting, botanical garden, theatres (including the large Teatro Tacón), opera-house, bull-ring, etc. The cigars made at Havana have universal celebrity; it has also manufactures of chocolate, sugar, woollen fabrics, and straw hats. The chief articles of export are sugar, tobacco, cigars, molasses, beeswax, and honey. The number of cigars exported in 1901 was 213,425,089. The trade is chiefly with the United States, Great Britain, Spain, France, and Germany, and there is connection by steamer with ports of the United States, Mexico, England, France, Germany, and Spain. The climate of the city is hot and moist, with an annual rainfall of 51.7 inches. The average temperature of July and August, the hottest months, is 82°, with a maximum of about 88°. The minimum temperature (December) is 50°. The city underwent an extraordinary change with respect to hygienic conditions during its brief occupation by the United States. Pop. in 1899, 235,981. Havana is a bishop's see. The city was founded by Velásquez, in 1519, and was the seat of the Spanish colonial authorities. In 1762 it was taken by the British, who restored it to Spain in the following year. In 1898 it was blockaded by the fleet of the United States.

Havre (Fr. Le Havre, leh ā'v'r; formerly Le Havre de Grace, L. Portus Gratia,—i.e., "haven of grace"), a city and seaport of France, in Seine-Inférieure, on the N. side of the estuary of the Seine, at its entrance into the English Channel, 143 miles WNW. of Paris. Lat.  $49^{\circ} 29' 16''$  N.; lon.  $0^{\circ} 6' 9''$  E. It is the seaport of Paris and, after Marseilles, the port of greatest importance in France. It is surrounded by ramparts and lofty walls, crowned by a parapet and adorned with finely-planted allées. The fortifications are very extensive and complete, rendering the city a fortress of the first class. The harbor has 8 basins, not including the outer port, of which the Bassin de l'Eure, which gives accommodation to the transatlantic steamers, covers 70 acres. The oldest of the docks, the Bassin du Roi, was excavated in 1669. The entrance to the avant-port, or outer-port, is between two long and substantially constructed jetties, one of which, more particularly, the Jetée du Nord, is a favorite promenade. The most remarkable buildings are the church of Notre Dame, the exchange or bourse, arsenal, custom-house, hôtel de ville (city-hall), palace of justice, Musée Bibliothèque, theatres, barracks, and light-houses on Cap de la Hève. Elegant villas cover the slopes of Ingouville, which may be considered as a suburb of the town. The principal institutions are a school of navigation, a school of geometry as applied to the arts, public library, lyceum, school of industrial arts, and observatory. The manufactures consist of steam-engines, anchors, glass-ware, cotton goods, flour, linen, earthen- and stone-ware, paper, lace, oil, refined sugar, cables, and cordage. There are also breweries, numerous brick- and tile-works, and an extensive government tobacco-factory. From the building-yards a great number of sailing-vessels and steamers are fitted out.

Havre imports vast quantities of cotton and cotton goods, coffee, cacao, copper, rubber, hides, etc. Its exports consist of numerous articles of French manufacture (especially silks, cottons, woollens, and leather), hides, copper, coffee, rubber, wine, feathers, liqueurs, flour, etc. In its coastwise trade Havre is exceeded among the ports of France only by Marseilles and Bordeaux. Regular lines of steamers communicate with the principal European and foreign ports. Havre was founded by Francis I. in the early part of the sixteenth century. Pop. in 1861, 74,336; in 1891, 114,004; in 1901, 129,044.

Havre, hav'er, a banking post-town of Choteau co., Mont., on the Great Northern R., 7 miles E. of Aminoboiné. Pop. in 1900, 1033.

Havre de Grace, hav'er de grass, a banking city of Harford co., Md., is at the N. end of Chesapeake Bay, on the W. bank of the Susquehanna River, at its mouth, 36 miles NE. of Baltimore, on the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington and the Baltimore and Ohio Rs., both of which here cross the river on iron bridges about 3500 feet long between the shores. The city is an important shipping point for coal and lumber, and it has canneries, flour- and other mills, textile- and carriage-works, and manufactures of shoes, tin cans, blinds and sash, etc. Pop. in 1900, 3423.

Hawaii, hā-wī'ee, or Hawaiian Islands, a possession of the United States in the Pacific Ocean, officially known as the "Territory of Hawaii." The group was named by Captain Cook "The Sandwich Islands," after Lord Sandwich, of the British Admiralty. The islands are situated on the route from San Francisco and Vancouver to China and Japan, about 2400 miles from the American coast at San Francisco. Lat.  $18^{\circ} 56'$  to  $23^{\circ} 15'$  N.; lon.  $154^{\circ} 49'$  to  $160^{\circ} 20'$  W. The group consists of 8 inhabited islands and several barren rocks, the names and area of the former being, Hawaii (the "Owyhee" of Captain Cook), 4015 sq. m.; Maui, 723; Oahu, 600; Kauai, 544; Molokai ("Lepers' Island"), 261; Lanai, 135; Kahoolawe, 69; and Nihaui, 97. The total area is thus estimated at from 6000 to 7000 sq. m., but some geographers reduce this figure considerably. The islands are of volcanic origin and here are found some of the largest volcanoes (both active and extinct) in the world. Mauna Kea and Mauna Loa, on the island of Hawaii (the latter an active volcano), are respectively 13,805 and 13,675 feet in height. Kilauea, with its vast crater and lake of lava, rises from the eastern slope of Mauna Loa and has an elevation of 4400 ft. It is one of the most active craters of the globe. Other mountains traverse this island, giving it a rugged and picturesque appearance, its bold cliffs, 1000 to 3000 ft. in height in some places, fronting upon the sea. On Maui is the famous crater of Haleakala, 25 to 36 miles in circumference, 2000 to 3000 ft. deep, and 10,030 ft. above sea-level. Though of volcanic origin, the group has minor elements of coral formation; ledges of compact limestone are due to upheaval. The rocks consist of: basalt, lava, coral-rock, and sandstone; the minerals include sulphur, pyrites, common salt, sal-ammoniac, hematite, quartz, etc. The soil is composed of disintegrated lava, scoria, and volcanic sand. The forests are extensive and the flora includes the candle-nut tree, a species of pandanus, acacia, palms (including the cocoa-nut), ferns, parasitic plants, etc.; sandal-wood was formerly important, but has become exhausted. Native and introduced fruits flourish, notably the strawberry and raspberry, plantain, banana, mango, guava, Malay-apple, semi-wild coffee, etc.; taro is a most important food-plant. The great bulk of the population is engaged in the sugar-industry. The climate is salubrious, with fresh and pure breezes, the temperature for the year having a mean of about  $72^{\circ}$ , with maxima and minima of  $86^{\circ}$ – $89^{\circ}$  and  $55^{\circ}$ – $60^{\circ}$ . The annual rainfall varies greatly, from less than 25 inches in some years and on certain islands to upward of 200 inches in other years and other islands (Oahu, Hawaii). The group is connected by steamships with the United States, British Columbia, New Zealand, Australia, China, and Japan; interisland communication is also by steam. There are railroads aggregating about 100 miles. The islands are connected by telegraphic cable with San Francisco and with the Philippines. Telephones have been introduced throughout Oahu, Kauai, and Hawaii, and partly in Maui; Oahu and Hawaii are connected by telegraphic cable, and the telegraph encircles Oahu, Hawaii, and Maui. The native fauna is limited, with probably no indigenous mammals larger than rats and bats. Live-stock of all ordinary species thrives. The native population, estimated by Cook at 400,000 in 1778, has rapidly decreased, the census of 1896 showing only 31,019, with 8436 of mixed blood, and that of 1900, 29,834, with 7835 part Hawaiians. The Hawaiians are intellectually among the most gifted representatives of the Polynesian race. They profess Christianity. The total population of the island group in 1900 was 154,001, including 61,111 Japanese, 23,633 Caucasians, 25,767 Chinese. The Caucasians consist in great part of Portuguese. The value of the exports in 1900 was: sugar, \$23,771,344; rice, \$24,077; coffee, \$176,749; bananas and pineapples, \$48,039. The exports of sugar to the United States in the year 1902-03 were valued at \$25,310,684. In early times each island had a king, but under Kamehameha I. (died 1819) the islands were formed into one kingdom, — a simple despotism, which continued until 1846, when Kamehameha III. granted a constitutional government. In Jan., 1893, a revolution occurred. Queen Liliuokalani was deposed, and in 1894 a republic was organized. The islands were formally annexed by the United States in Aug., 1898, and constituted the territory of Hawaii in June, 1900. Capital, Honolulu.

Total number, not including the smaller islets, 160, about half of which are permanently inhabited. Total area, about 3000 sq. m. Pop. about 100,000. Arran and Bute are frequently not included in the Hebrides. The climate is moist and chilly in the Outer Hebrides; much rain in winter, but little snow. The herring-fishery, formerly an important resource of the people, has greatly declined. The rearing of sheep is the most profitable branch of industry. The language is Gaelic. The Hebrides in remote times were subject to the kings of Norway, but in 1266 were ceded to Scotland. They were then held by various native chieftains in vassalage to the Scottish monarch, but subsequently all fell into the hands of one powerful chief, who, in 1346, assumed the title of "Lord of the Isles." In the sixteenth century they were incorporated in Scotland.

Among the notable structures are several churches, the university buildings, the town-hall, and the vast and imposing castle, crowning a height about 300 feet above the town. This splendid residence of the Electors Palatine, one of the most interesting architectural monuments of its kind, portions of which date from the Middle Ages, is in great part a ruin. The most beautiful portions are the Otto-Heinrichs-Bau, a superb example of German Renaissance style dating from the middle of the sixteenth century, and the Friedrichs-Bau, erected half a century later. In one of the cellars of the castle is the great Heidelberg tun, which holds 800 hogsheads. The University of Heidelberg, founded in 1386, is the oldest university in the German Empire and, after the universities of Prague and Vienna, the oldest of the German universities. It has a library of 400,000 volumes and many rare manuscripts and is one of the most celebrated schools in Europe. Its students number over 1300. The town is embellished with numerous sculptural monuments. In the sixteenth century Heidelberg was prominent as a seat of Calvinism. In 1622, Tilly took it by storm and gave it up to pillage. In 1688 the French took the town and partially burned it and in 1693 it again fell into their hands and was destroyed. It has belonged to Baden since 1803. Heidelberg has manufactures of beer, cigars, leather, surgical appliances, machinery, etc.

Hesse, hɛ̃sɛ̃ (Ger. Hessen, hɛ̃s'sɛ̃n), GRAND-DUCHY or, formerly Hesse-Darmstadt, hɛ̃sɛ̃ dɛ̃rm'stɛ̃t, a state of Germany, consisting of two principal portions, separated by a strip of Prussian territory, and of a number of small detached fragments. The northern of the two main portions (the province of Upper Hesse, or Oberhessen) is surrounded by the Prussian province of Hesse-Nassau. The southern portion, comprising the provinces of Starkenburg and Rhenish Hesse, is bounded by Prussia, Bavaria, and Baden. The capital of the grand-duchy and of the province of Starkenburg is Darmstadt. Giessen and Mains are the capitals respectively of Upper Hesse and Rhenish Hesse. The area is 2965 sq. m. The pop. in 1890 was 992,883; in 1900, 1,119,893.

Upper Hesse is mountainous and hilly, containing the Vogelsberg, which rises in the Taunus to a height of about 2500 feet, and part of the Taunus, nearly 2000 ft. In this division is the extensive undulating tract called the Wetterau. Southern Hesse is in great part mountainous, the Odenwald having an elevation of about 2000 ft., but the western portion of this division and a strip to the north belong respectively to the plains of the Rhine and Main. The greater part of the territory is situated in the basin of the Rhine, the rest in that of the Weser. The Rhine traverses the S. portion. At Mains it receives the Main, which touches the borders of Hesse. Another affluent of the Rhine, the Lahn, flows past Giessen. Another stream is the Fulda, belonging to the Weser system. Most of the territory is arable and the soil is very fertile. The cereals in the order of their acreage are rye, barley, oats, and wheat. Potatoes are extensively raised and much attention is paid to fruit-raising. The vine is cultivated in all the provinces, but chiefly in Rhenish Hesse. Cattle-rearing is an important branch of rural industry. The chief mineral products are coal, iron, and salt. The mineral springs of Nauheim are in Upper Hesse. The chief educational institution is the University of Giessen. Two-thirds of the inhabitants are Protestants and most of the remainder Catholics, the Jews numbering about 25,000. Chief towns, Mains, Darmstadt, Offenbach, Worms, and Giessen. The old landgraviate of Hesse was divided into several parts in 1567 and soon after all of the territories were embraced in the two landgraviates of Hesse-Darmstadt and Hesse-Cassel. The former was erected into a grand-duchy in 1806.

Hesse-Cassel, hɛ̃sɛ̃ kɛ̃s'sɛ̃l, or Electoral Hesse (Ger. Kurhessen, kɔ̃r'hɛ̃s'sɛ̃n), formerly a state of western Germany, was incorporated with Prussia in 1866, and now forms part of the province of Hesse-Nassau. The ruler bore the title of landgrave down to 1803, when he was raised to the dignity of imperial elector.

Hesse-Homburg, hɛ̃sɛ̃ hom'bɛ̃rg, formerly a small state, styled landgraviate, of western Germany. Capital, Homburg. It was incorporated with Hesse-Darmstadt in 1866, but was afterwards, in the same year, ceded to Prussia, and now forms part of the province of Hesse-Nassau.

These territories were incorporated with Prussia in 1866. It is bounded on the N. by Westphalia and Hanover, E. by Prussian Saxony, Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, and Bavaria, S. by the south part of the grand-duchy of Hesse, W. by Rhenish Prussia, Westphalia, and Waldeck. There is a small detached territory to the E. of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, containing Schmalkalden, and there are some other detached fragments. Area, 6060 sq. m. Pop. in 1890, 1,664,000; in 1900, 1,898,000. It is divided into the districts of Cassel and Wiesbaden, the latter corresponding to the former duchy of Nassau. Surface elevated and mountainous. The mountains include the Westerwald in the extreme W., the Taunus in the SW., the Thuringian Forest in the extreme E. (attaining a height of about 3000 feet), and the Meissner. The chief rivers are the Weser, with its two upper branches, the Werra and Fulda; the Rhine, which forms the SW. boundary; and the Main and Lahn, affluents of the Rhine. The soil is generally fertile. Chief crops are cereals, potatoes, flax, hemp, and tobacco. Fruit is abundant and excellent. The vine is cultivated in the S. and W. of the province. Excellent wine is produced in the district called the Rheingau and in the vineyards of Steinburg, Rüdesheim, Hochheim, and Johannisberg. Among the minerals are iron, coal, zinc, copper, lead, and manganese. The province has numerous mineral springs, among the best-known being those of Wiesbaden, Homburg, Schwalbach, Ems, Selters, Schlangenberg, and Nenndorf. At the head of the educational institutions is the University of Marburg. The capital is Cassel; the largest city, Frankfurt.

Himalaya (him-â-lâ-yâ or him-â-lâ'yâ) or Himma-leh (him-mâ-lâ) Mountains (i.e., the "abode of snow;" anc. Imawa), a chain or system of mountains, the most elevated on the globe, extending in an irregular curve, with a general direction WNW. and ESE. through 24° of longitude, nearly 1500 miles, with a breadth of from 100 to 160 miles, along the N. boundary of India, separating it from Tibet, and traversing Kashmir. The Himalayas are the southeasternmost of the mountain-ranges which radiate from the Pamir plateau. They are situated between lat. 27° and 35° N. and between lon. 72° and 96° E., and extend from a point a short distance beyond the river Indus on the W. to the region of the great bend of the river Brahmaputra on the E.; or, roughly, from the mountain confines of Afghanistan to Upper Burma. The Himalayas are not a single mountain-chain, but a range of rugged snowy peaks, depending from or forming a scarp to the high table-land of Tibet, and separated by deep gorges, the outlets of rapid streams generated by the melted snow and ice of the interior. The mountains rise on the S. from the plains of the Ganges and Brahmaputra in a wall-like range from 4000 to 5000 feet high, broken up at intervals by deep precipitous chasms, through which the springs and rivers flow down with great impetuosity. Between these and the higher ranges lie the fertile and well-cultivated valleys of Nepal and Bhutan. A striking feature of the outer region is the low-lying and marshy, but luxuriantly overgrown, depression known as the "Terai" or "Tarai," which borders the British and Nepalese frontiers for a length of about 500 miles. The mean elevation of the range has been estimated at from 16,000 to 18,000 ft., but 40 or more of its peaks are known to exceed 24,000 ft. Mount Everest (or the peak that was until recently, 1904, identified with a somewhat minor summit, the Gaurisankar) rises to 29,002 ft. and is, so far as is known, the culminating point of the globe. Other lofty summits are Nanga Parbat, in the extreme NW. (26,829 ft.); Dhaulagiri (26,825 ft.) and Kunchinjunga (28,156 ft.), in the central section; and Shumalari or Chamalari (23,933 ft.), in the eastern section. In an inner Transindian range, known as the Mustagh (or Karakorum) and which is frequently reckoned to the Himalayas, is Dapsang or Mount Godwin-Austen (Peak K², 28,278 ft.), together with the less-known Mustagh Tower, Maasherbrum, Gasherbrum, etc. The high table-land of Tibet, forming the N. extension of the range, has a more gradual and extensive slope than the steep and abrupt mountain-declivities of the S. There are numerous passes in the Himalayas, the greater number of which lie above 17,000 ft. Among the better known are the Ibi-Gamin (the loftiest, 20,459 ft., NW. of the giant Nanda-Devi) and the Mana-Ghat, between Gnari-Khorsum and Gurlwal; the Parang-La, in Spiti; the Chang-La and Takalung-La, in Ladakh; and the Bara-Laeha, the lowest, 16,000 ft. The lofty Mustagh Pass, upward of 19,000 ft. elevation, traverses the main Karakorum range. (See KARAKORUM.) The nominal snow-line is found on the S. or Indian face of the Himalayas at an average elevation of about 16,300 ft. and on the Tibetan side at 17,500 ft. Giant glaciers, some of which descend to the exceedingly low level of 11,000 (and even 10,200) ft., are found in various or most parts of the system, the most extensive being those of the Karakorum branch (Hispar, Baltoro, Biafo, Chogo Lungma), and after these, perhaps, the glaciers of the Everest-Kunchinjunga region. The longest of the Kunchinjang glaciers appears to be the Zemu, 18 miles long. There are practically no lakes in the true Himalayan region, and the chain, differing from the long American cordilleras, is destitute of volcanoes. The vegetation of the Himalayas is an extremely varied one, and on the deeper southern slopes is of extraordinary luxuriance, the "sylvan wonders" of Sikkim and the still lower region having long been famous. A flora with marked tropical elements is found to an elevation of some 3000 ft., beyond which, and continued to some 7000 ft., follows a belt of oaks, chestnuts, and laurels. This belt is succeeded by the central and southern European floral zone (with pines, cedars—Deodora) to about 12,000 ft., after which follow the areas of gnarled trees and shrubs, and above these the grass-lands. The limit of tree-growth is found on the northern or Tibetan side at about 14,000 ft., in growths of birch, oak, and willow, but in the central range trees are rarely met with above 11,000-12,000 ft. In a few exceptional spots flowering plants have been noted at 19,000 ft. Grain (wheat, barley) is cultivated on the Tibetan side at 14,000-15,000 ft. The magnificent growths of giant rhododendron constitute some of the most striking objects of the vegetation of the globe. The animal life of the Himalayas is also very varied, embracing a multitude of types ordinarily associated with the true tropics, such as the tiger, leopard, rhinoceros, and monkey, and other types of the temperate and even subarctic regions (bear, wolf, boar, big-horned sheep, various deer, marmot, etc.). The tiger and leopard both ascend to the snow-line. In the region bordering upon Tibet is the home of the yak. The Himalayas may properly be considered to be the home of the pheasant tribe of birds. The higher summits and nuclear mass of the Himalayas appear to be constructed of granites and gneisses, associated with schists of different kinds; but the outer and even lofty flanks carry sedimentary deposits of comparatively recent date, showing in the fossils of marine character that the main mass of the system was upheaved in late-Tertiary times. Marine fossils have been obtained from elevations of 20,000-21,000 feet. The delightful climate of a middle zone in the Himalayas has specially fitted the region for positions of "summer station" and sanitarium. (See SIMLA and DARJILING.) Among the more noted explorations of the Himalayas are those of Hooker, the brothers Schlagintweit (who, in 1855, on the Ibi-Gamin, attained an altitude of 22,259 ft.), Waugh, Godwin-Austen, Graham, Sir William Conway (who, with the Swiss guide Zurbriggen, reached on the Pioneer Peak of the Karakorum range an elevation of about 22,700 ft.), Douglas Freshfield, and Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter Workman (the former of whom, in 1903, on a summit of the Karakorum facing the great Chogo Langma Glacier, reached a height of 23,394 ft.).

On the NE. and N. it unites with the high mass of the Pamir and the Himalaya system and for some distance forms the border-bulwark between Afghanistan and British India and separates Badakhshan from Kafiristan. It rises in many parts to upward of 20,000 feet, and its culminating point is the Tiraj (or Tirach) Mir, E. of the Nuksan Pass and NW. of Chitral, the elevation of which is now assumed to be about 25,000 ft. The more westerly portion of the chain towards Kabul has not the formidable aspect with which it was at one time associated and is easily crossed by passes; in this section, where the snow-line lies at about 13,500 ft., most of the summits are uncovered during much of the year. The principal passes are the Khawak, Irak, Nuksan, and Baroghil, the last conducting from Chitral and Kashmir to the upper Oxus valley and Yarkand. Hoang-ho, hwáng' ho' (i.e., the "Yellow River," so named from the color which the yellow clay along its banks gives to its waters), one of the principal rivers of the Chinese Empire, rises in the Koko-nor territory of Tibet, on the Odon-tala plain, near lat. 35° N. and lon. 97° E., at an elevation of 14,000 feet. It flows northeastward, traversing the NW. corner of China proper, into Mongolia, turns eastward nearly at a right angle in about lat. 41° N., lon. 107° 30' E., re-enters China proper, and, after abrupt bends southward and eastward, enters the Gulf of Pe-chi-li, in lat. 38°, after a total course estimated at 2600 miles. The chief affluent is the Wei-ho, coming from the W., which enters at the final great bend of the river and at the convergence of the provinces of Shen-si, Shan-si, and Ho-nan. On its banks are many cities of first and second rank, the principal being Lan-chow, which is at the head of navigation, and Kai-fung, respectively the capitals of the provinces of Kan-su and Ho-nan. Previous to 1855 it entered the Yellow Sea by a mouth some hundreds of miles S. of its present one. This stream is so turbulent and impetuous that it is scarcely adapted to Chinese navigation, and its frequent overflow is the cause of much destruction, despite the dike- and dam-structures which, from the oldest times, have been erected along various parts of the river's course. A connection between the basins of the Hoang-ho and the Yang-tse-kiang is formed by the Grand Canal.

Hon'do, or Honshin, hon-shee'oo (i.e., "mainland," called by many geographers Niph'on', Nippon, or Nippon, but that name belongs in strictness to the whole Japanese empire), the largest island of Japan, extending from the Strait of Matsmai (Matsumai, Sagaru) southwestward for more than 800 miles to the narrow channels which separate it from the islands of Kiu-shiu and Shikoku. It is long, narrow, and curved in outline, with many bays and outlying islets. Its climate and productions vary much with the latitude. The island is by far the most important and populous in Japan (under which head it is more fully described), and contains the capital of the empire (Tokyo) and the loftiest summit of the realm (Fujiyama). Area, about 87,500 sq. m. Pop. in 1899, 33,327,935.

Honduras, hon-doo'räs (Sp. pron. on-doo'räs), a republic of Central America, lying between lat. 13° 10' and 16° 2' N., lon. 83° and 90° W., and having N. the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Honduras, W. Guatemala, SW. Salvador and the Bay of Fonseca, and SE. Nicaragua. Capital, Tegucigalpa. Area, about 46,250 sq. m., with a coast-line of about 350 miles. Estimated population, exclusive of uncivilized Indians, in 1900, 557,500. The large island of Ruatan and its dependencies belong to the state. (See BAY ISLANDS.) The greater part of the surface is mountainous, having numerous more or less parallel ridges with E. and W. or ESE-WNW. trends, enclosing intercommunicating plains and elevated plateaus. The ancient volcanic coast-ridge on the N. culminates in Congreho peak, about 8936 feet in height. A younger volcanic series attains in the S., in the Cerro de Belaque, an altitude of over 9200 feet. Most of the mountains are composed of ancient schists, overlaid by newer sedimentary deposits (Trias, Cretaceous), which are largely metalliferous. There are no active volcanoes on the mainland. The principal rivers are the Chamelióon, Santiago (or Uliá), Román (or Aguán), Patook (Patuca), Negro, and Segovia (or Wanks), flowing to the Caribbean Sea, the last forming part of the boundary on the side of Nicaragua; and the Choluteca and Goascorán, which fall into the Pacific Ocean. Near the sources of the Goascorán and the Humaya there is a low divide in the mountains, permitting of easy inter-oceanic communication. Most of the streams are badly obstructed by rapids and difficult of navigation. The most important is the Santiago. Lake Yojoa, in the W. of the state, 25 miles long by 8 miles broad, is the only lake of note. The Bay or Gulf of Fonseca contains numerous islands, on one of which (Tigré) is situated Amapala, the only port of Honduras on the Pacific Ocean. The principal ports on the N. coast are Omoo, Puerto Caballos (or Puerto Cortés), Ceiba, and Trujillo. The exports consist chiefly of metals (valued at about $900,000 in 1902), fruits (mainly bananas), horned cattle, coffee ($750,000), hides and skins, timber, tobacco, and indigo. Gold is found in the sands of all the streams, and there are copper-mines of great richness. Iron-ores, platinum, cinnamon, zinc, and antimony exist, but are not extensively worked; coal has been discovered in several localities. The valuable timbers, chiefly mahogany and rosewood, constituted at one time a very important article of commerce. Other products are fustic, Brazil-wood, annatto, copaiba, copal, ipocuanha, rubber, the pitch-pine and cedar, lime, lemon, orange, and coconut. The chief culture is that of bananas. Sarsaparilla and vanilla of the best quality grow on the NE. coast. The sugar-cane yields two or three crops a year; the coffee is of excellent quality; wheat and other cereals flourish in the elevated districts, and maize near the coasts. Among wild animals are the deer, peccary, tapir, various monkeys, racoon, opossum, ant-eater, armadillo, jaguar, ocelot, tiger-cat, coyote, and puma. The climate is generally healthy in the mountainous interior, but fevers prevail over the low coast tracts. There are as yet few good roads in the republic, and transportation is mainly accomplished by mules and ox-carts. A single line of railway, 57 miles in length, connects Tegucigalpa with La Pimienta. Mean temperature of year, 79°; maximum, about 92°; minimum, 62°. Annual rainfall, 47 inches. The government of the republic is vested in a president, elected for four years and assisted by a cabinet of ministers, and in a chamber of deputies. Honduras was from 1823 to 1839 one of the states of the republic of Central America, founded after the overthrow of Spanish dominion, and on the dissolution of that confederacy became an independent republic.

Honduras, Bay of, a wide inlet of the Caribbean Sea, mostly between lat. 16° and 18° N. and lon. 86° and 88° W., having S. Guatemala and Honduras, and W. British Honduras and Yucatan. Hong Kong (i.e., "the fragrant streams"), an island belonging to Great Britain, off the SE. coast of China, situated at the mouth of the estuary that leads to Canton, from which it is distant (SE.) 95 miles. Together with a small tract on the main-land, on the peninsula of Kow-lung, it constitutes the crown colony of Hong Kong, having an area of about 30 sq. m. Appended to this is an area of nearly 400 sq. m. leased from China in 1898 (see below). Lat. of the observatory, 22° 18' 12" N.; lon. 114° 10' 28" E. The island is about 10 miles in extreme length from NW. to SE. and 7 miles in extreme breadth, and is separated from the main-land by a strait, which, at Ly-e-Mun ("Carpfish") Pass, is less than half a mile wide. The general appearance of the island is unprepossessing, it being composed mostly of lofty barren rocks that rise from the sea to heights of from 1000 to 1825 feet (Victoria Peak or, more properly, Mount Gough), and so abruptly as to leave hardly any space to build upon. Some rank vegetation here and there, and a little herbage and brushwood constitute almost its entire flora, which is, however, rich and varied, numbering upward of a thousand species of flowering plants and ferns. The fauna, excepting insects, is limited. The climate is enervating, with the summer temperature rising to 90°-95°, and rarely falling below 75°. Victoria, the capital (itself commonly called Hong Kong), is situated on a magnificent bay of the same name, on the N. side of the island. It contains the bulk of the population of the colony. The city stretches for 4 miles along the shore, portions of it clambering up the steep hillsides, while a part consists of boats. It has many stately buildings and all the appurtenances of a well-equipped modern city, except in the matter of transportation, which is rendered difficult by the precipitous site. Hong Kong is a free port. Its capacious harbor, which is strongly fortified, is one of the most animated in the East, every day witnessing the arrival of a whole fleet of junks and fishing-boats in addition to the steamers which come from all parts of the world. Some of the docks and magazines are on the main-land, and on the S. side of the little island, at Aberdeen, there are ship-building yards and graving-docks. Hong Kong is a great centre of the foreign trade of China, and a mart for opium, flour, mercury, ivory, betel, cotton and cotton-goods, hemp, amber, oil, petroleum, woollens, silks, salt, tea, sugar, etc. It has manufactures of sugar, cotton, vermilion, etc., and various native industries, such as ivory-carving and metal-working, are carried on.

Hong Kong was occupied by the British in 1841 and was ceded to England by the treaty of Nanjing in 1842. The government of the colony is vested in a governor, aided by a secretary, commandant, chief-justice, attorney-general, treasurer, harbor-master, director of public works, and legislative council. It is the see of an Anglican bishop. For purposes of defence, an area was leased by Great Britain in 1898, including part of the peninsula of Kow-lung, Lan-tao Island, and the waters of Mirs and Deep bays. The population in 1901, including the military and naval establishments, was 234,000, of which number 275,000 were Chinese and 6430 European and American foreigners.

Honiton, hün'e-ton, a town of England, co. of Devon, on the Otter, 16 miles ENE. of Exeter. It is picturesquely situated and has an interesting old parish church. It has long been celebrated for its lace. Pop. in 1901, 3271.

Honolulu, hon-o-loo'loo, a city, capital and principal port of the Hawaiian Islands, on a good harbor of the S. coast of Oahu. Lat. 21° 18' 12" N.; lon. 157° 50' 36" W. The surrounding country is a narrow volcanic plain, about 9 miles in length, and generally barren. The city is regularly laid out, with clean streets, fine public squares, and tropical gardens, and has a pleasant and healthful climate. It contains the extensive and handsome government buildings, a (former) palace of the king, schools and colleges, public library, museum, theatre, quarantine and general hospitals, large warehouses, banks, street-railways, electric lights, wharves (with landing facilities for the largest vessels), foundries, ship-yards, and manufactories of iron, carriages, ice, etc. It is the seat of an Anglican bishop and of a Roman Catholic vicar apostolic. Newspapers and magazines are published here in the Hawaiian, Japanese, Chinese, and various European languages. Pop. in 1890, 22,907; in 1900, 39,306. Honolulu has regular steamship communication with San Francisco, Seattle, Tacoma, Victoria, Sydney, and Chinese, Japanese, and New Zealand ports. In the vicinity are the Punch Bowl and Diamond Head Hills, and Walkiki, a sea-bathing resort.

Hottentots, an African race, by some ethnologists thought to be the aboriginal occupants of the S. end of that continent. Their limits may be said, in general terms, to have been the Orange River on the N. and NE. and the Key on the E.; while on the NW. they passed the Orange River and advanced N. and NE. far into the interior through what is now Great Namaqualand into Damara-land. The Hottentots are generally tall and meagre, of a pale olive complexion, with projecting cheek-bones. They have thick lips, a flat nose with wide nostrils, woolly hair, and little beard. The women are often elegantly formed in early life, but become repulsively deformed. Both sexes are distinguished by excessive incurvation of the spine. When the Dutch first settled at the Cape of Good Hope the Hottentots were a numerous nation of pastoral and partially nomadic habits. At the present day this race, in its pure type, is nearly extinct within the wide territory which formerly belonged to it; and of the 200,000-300,000 Hottentots, as they are now called, there are few, except in the extreme N., who understand the true Hottentot language. Of the unmixed pure Hottentots the number is thought not to exceed 13,000. The Koras, or Korannas (shoe-wearers), higher up the Orange River, still remain a favorable specimen of the pure Hottentot race. The Namas (or Namaquas) dwell towards the mouth of the Orange. The Bushmen are by some regarded as of Hottentot race; by others, again, they are thought to be the true aboriginal element of South Africa, from which, modified by crossings, has developed the Hottentot. The Hottentot language shows in certain directions a marked perfection and is strongly accentuated by the "click" sounds.

Hudson Bay, North America, is an inland sea con-nected with the Atlantic Ocean by Hudson Strait. It is comprised between lat. 51° and 70° N. (inclusive of the arm lying N. of Fox Channel) and between lon. 75° and 95° W. It is about 1300 miles long and its greatest width is nearly 600 miles. In the extreme S. it narrows into a long arm, called James Bay. It lies entirely in British territory, in a region of rigorous climate, having for its borders chiefly Keewatin on the W. and S. and Ungava on the E. The bay occupies a basin in the ancient Laurentian area, the greater part of which is shallow, with low shore-lines, especially in the S., sloping up to the water-parting of the St. Lawrence River. Steep bluffs, rising to 1000 and 2000 feet, are found at a few points on the E. and W. coasts. The general depth of water in the main bay is 70-100 fathoms. Navigation is obstructed by ice for 9 or 10 months in the year. On the extreme N. the bay communicates with the Arctic Ocean through Fury and Hecla Strait and the Gulf of Bothnia, and by this passage receives much Arctic ice. The most important port on Hudson Bay is York Factory. The largest affluents are the Nelson River on the W., the Albany, discharging into James Bay, on the SW., and the Main and Rupert rivers on the E.

Hudson Bay Territory, a name formerly given to the region in British America which is now included in a portion of what was until recently officially designated the Northwest Territories of Canada and in Keewatin.

Hudson River, called for a short distance above its mouth, North River, a river of the state of New York, rises in its highest source in the small lake "Tear of the Clouds," off the S. of Mount Marcy, in the Adirondack Mountains, at an elevation of 4320 feet. It runs southward, with wide deviations from a direct course, and intersects Warren co. At Luzerne, in the S. part of this county, it falls 60 feet over a nearly perpendicular ledge of gneiss. Below Sandy Hill it runs southward almost continually, with small deviations from a direct line. It forms the boundary between the cos. of Saratoga, Albany, Greene, Ulster, Orange, and Rockland, N.Y., and Bergen and Hudson, N.J., on the right, and the cos. of Washington, Rensselaer, Columbia, Dutchess, Putnam, Westchester, and New York, on the left, and enters New York Bay at the city of New York, separating Manhattan Island from New Jersey. It is about 350 miles long. The tide ascends about 150 miles to Troy, which is the head of navigation. Magnificent steamboats ply over the entire course, between Troy and New York, and the largest ships can ascend to Hudson, 117 miles. At Albany and Poughkeepsie railroad bridges have been constructed. The chief cities on the Hudson are New York, Jersey City, Hoboken, Yonkers, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Kingston, Hudson, Albany, Troy, Cohoes, and Glens Falls. Minor well-known places are Tarrytown, Ossining (Sing Sing), Haverstraw, Peekskill, West Point, and Catskill. The largest affluents are the Mohawk, Walkill, Hoosic, and Sacondaga. The Hudson is perhaps unrivalled among American rivers for picturesque and magnificent scenery. Below Newburgh the river passes through the Highlands of the Hudson, an ancient range of the Appalachian system, whose peaks rise abruptly from the shore to the height of 1000-1600 feet. (See HIGHLANDS OF THE HUDSON.) Between Rockland and Westchester cos. is an expanded part of the river, called Tappan Bay which is about 3½ miles wide and 13 miles long. Immediately above this is another expansion called Haverstraw Bay. Below Tappan Bay the W. bank of the river is a vertical or very steep wall of trap rock, 250-600 feet high, known as the Palisades. This remarkable bluff extends in a nearly straight line for a distance of about 16 miles. The banks of the Hudson are studded with beautiful villas. The river is a mile or more in width opposite the Palisades and is about a mile wide between New York and Jersey City. In the passage through the Highlands it contracts to about 1600 feet. This river was named in honor of Henry Hudson, who explored it in 1609. It was on the Hudson River that steam-navigation was first successfully inaugurated in 1807. It is connected at Troy by means of the Erie Canal with Buffalo on Lake Erie.

Lat. 53° 44' N.; lon. 0° 20' W. The old town, about three-fourths of a mile in length, stands on the W. side of the river Hull and is enclosed on the N. and W. by three noble docks. Hull, in its modern quarters, is well built, but is lacking in striking edifices. In the centre of the old town is the beautiful church of the Holy Trinity, in Decorated and Perpendicular style, 272 feet in length and having a lofty central tower. Among the notable public buildings of the city are the custom-house, exchange, royal infirmary, royal theatre, town-hall (in Italian Renaissance), the modern prison, and post-office.

Among the institutions may be mentioned the Trinity House (a nautical school), the Royal Institution, and a grammar-school dating from 1486. There are numerous hospitals and other charities, collegiate and medical schools, mechanics' institute, lyceum, sailors' institute, zoological garden, botanical garden, and several fine public parks.

Hull ranks as the third port in the kingdom. It is the outlet for woolen and cotton goods from the midland counties and is the great entrepôt for the overseas trade with Germany and Scandinavia. Its docks and basins are very extensive and complete, are surrounded by broad quays and large warehouses, and are crowded with shipping of all nations. The city is the head-quarters of a deep-sea fishing fleet of 500 boats. The chief industries comprise ship-building (including the building of iron-clads), the manufacture of boilers and steam-engines, milling, tanning, sugar-refining, and the making of ropes and chains, canvas, machinery, chemicals, and oils.

The town, under the name of Myton-Wyke, figures as early as the time of Athelstan; but its consequence as a port dates from the time of Edward I., who conferred on it the designation of Kingston. It is the seat of a bishop and returns 3 members to parliament. Pop. in 1841, 65,670; in 1871, 121,892; in 1881, 165,690; in 1891, 199,991; in 1901, 238,618.

Hungary, hung'gar-e (Hun. Magyarország, mőd'yőn'-on'ăg, —i.e., "the land of the Magyars;" L. Hungaria; Ger. Ungarn, űng'garn), a kingdom of central Europe, constituting one of the autonomous halves of the dual Austro-Hungarian monarchy. It is situated between lat. 44° 10' and 49° 34' N. and lon. 14° 25' and 26° 30' E. Capital, Budapest. From the fact that the little river Leitha forms a part of its W. limit, it is sometimes called Transleithania, "the country beyond the Leitha," the Austrian division of the monarchy being known as Cisleithania, "the country on this side of the Leitha." Within these limits are comprised Hungary proper (with Transylvania), the united kingdom of Croatia and Slavonia, and the district of Fiume. Croatia-Slavonia has a diet of its own for legislation in its local affairs and is also represented in the Hungarian diet or parliament. The kingdom of Hungary is bounded on the N. by Galicia and, for a short distance, by Austrian Silesia; on the E. by Bukovina and Rumania; on the S. by Rumania, Servia, Bosnia, and Dalmatia (the rivers Danube and Save forming the boundary on the side of Servia and Bosnia); on the SW. by the Adriatic; on the W. by Carniola, Styria, and Lower Austria; and on the NW. by Moravia. The area of the kingdom is 125,430 sq. m.; of Hungary, exclusive of Croatia-Slavonia, 109,010 sq. m. The population in 1880 (close of the year) was 15,739,259; in 1890, 17,463,791; in 1900, 19,254,559. Among the principal towns of Hungary are Budapest, Szegedin, Szabadka (Maria Theresiopel), Debrecsin, Pressburg, Agram (capital of Croatia-Slavonia), Kecskemét, Arad, Temesvár, Grosswardein, Klausenburg, Fünfkirchen (Pécs), Miskolcs, Kaschau, Fiume, Odenburg, and Stuhlweissenburg. Hungary proper (with Transylvania) is divided into 68 counties.

Hungary is bordered for nearly 800 miles by the Carpathian mountains, which, in a vast curve, starting from the Danube near Pressburg, sweep through the N., the E., and the SE., finally bending westward, till they again regain the Danube at Orsova (the Iron Gate), on the frontiers of Rumania and Servia. The southeastern section of this great natural bulwark is frequently known as the Transylvanian Alps, and is continued in the Balkan Peninsula as part of the Balkan system of mountains. The northern and northwestern Carpathians, the central portion of which is known as the Beskids and the Tátra or High Tátra (Ger. Hoke Tátra; Hun. Magas Tátra), give out various ramifications and minor mountain associations, which are known under special names, as the Little Carpathians, the mountains of Neutra and of Liptau, the Fáttra, and the Hungarian Ore mountains, the last-named being particularly mineralised. Transylvania is in great part enclosed and covered by the ranges and ramifications of the Carpathians. The highest summits of all Hungary are found in the Tátra, with elevations reaching 8700 feet. For the general characteristics of this vast mountain-range, its scenery, peaks, passes, etc., see CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS.

A well-pronounced, although not very lofty, series of volcanic heights, known as the Tokay mountains and the Hegyalya, and famous for their wine product, occupy the north-central part of the kingdom, and have a course directed at right angles to the Carpathians nearest to them. The western part of Hungary, S. and W. of the Danube, is broken by spurs of the Noric and Carnic Alps, and in this section is the forested highland known as the Bakonyer Wald. The lowland tracts of Hungary are comprised almost entirely in what are known as the two Hungarian plains,—the Little Hungarian Plain (or Kis Alföld), which lies chiefly west of the Danube and covers an area of about 4500 sq. m., and the Great Hungarian Plain (the Alföld proper), which lies between the Danube and the Carpathians and covers an area of 25,000–30,000 sq. m. This great plain, a reliet of a former oceanic basin and at a still recent geological period made up of a series of large lacustrine areas, appears to the eye as in most part an unending, uniformly flat, and monotonous surface, with the horizon relieved here and there by growths of tall shade-trees and the clustered roofs of the village settlements. Although containing much unproductive area, the larger Hungarian plain is in general very fertile and contains vast ploughed fields and pasture grounds, filled with herds of horned cattle, horses, sheep, and swine. The large stretches of grazing- and farm-land are known as puszta, a name prominent in literature in association with the types of peasantry to be met with on the Alföld, especially the Csikós, or horseherd, who, however, is no longer the romantic figure that he was before the advent of railways. The southeastern part of the Alföld, known as the Banat, is considered one of the most fertile districts of Europe, and is famed for its wheat. The heart of Hungary contains large tracts of sandy downs and dunes, and there are large morasses which are the home of myriads of wild-fowl. Most of the central plain is elevated only from 300 to 400 feet above the level of the sea.

The rivers of Hungary belong to the basins of the Danube and its largest affluent, the Theiss; only one, the Poprád, breaks northward through the Carpathian barrier and is tributary to the Vistula. The principal river is the Danube (Duna), which enters Hungary on the W. at Pressburg, flows SE. and E. to Waitzen, then S. to Vukovar, and again generally E. to Orsova, forming in this final stretch the S. boundary. Its principal affluents in Hungary proper are, on the right, the Leitha, Raab, Kapos, and Drave, which last forms the S. boundary W. of the Danube; on the left, the March (on the W. border), Waag (with the Neutra), Gran, Theiss (which has a long and exceedingly tortuous southerly course), and the Temes. The larger affluents of the Theiss (Tisza), which for 200 miles flows parallel to the Danube, at about 60 miles distance, are the Sajó (which receives the Hernád) on the right and the Szamos, Körös, and Maros on the left. The principal lakes are on either side of the Bakonyer Wald and are the Plattensee (or Lake Balaton), the largest lake of southern Europe, which measures about 50 miles in length, and the Neusiedler See (Fertő-Tava), impregnated with salt and soda, SSW. of Pressburg, which has a length of about 20 miles. The largest canals are the Franzens Canal, in the S., connecting the Danube and the Theiss, and the Béga Canal, in the Banat, which unites the lower Theiss with the Temes. The climate varies exceedingly. In the mountainous districts the winters are rigorous. In the great plain the cold of winter is severe and the heat of summer intense. The annual rainfall in the mountains is 40–50 inches; over the great plains, 20–25 inches. Droughts are not infrequent. The chief mineral products are gold, silver, copper, antimony, lead, cobalt, mercury, salt (which occurs in vast deposits in the region of the northeastern Carpathians), alum, coal, lignite, and petroleum. The Hungarian opals are famous for their beauty. Mineral springs are numerous and many of them (Hunyadi, etc.) celebrated for their medicinal qualities. Soda lakes are scattered over both the Hungarian plains and nitre exists in vast quantities. Among the chief watering-places are Balaton-Füred, on Lake Balaton; Schmecks (or Tátra-Füred), in the High Tátra; and Hercules Füred (Baths of Hercules), near Mehadia. The country produces bountiful crops of grain, which is exported in large quantities. The leading cereals are wheat and maize. The Hungarian flour is celebrated for its quality. It was exported in 1902 to the value of about $35,000,000. The exports of wheat in the same year were valued at about half of that amount. The cultivation of the vine is carried to great perfection. Next to France, Hungary produces the greatest quantity of wine of any country in Europe, and the quality of several of its vintages, especially that of Tokay, is unrivalled. Fruit is raised in great variety and abundance. In addition to its grapes, the country excels in its melons, plums, cherries, and apricots. The various kinds of nuts constitute an important product. Tobacco is extensively grown. The mountains are covered with dense forests and woods (evergreens, oaks, beech). The rich pastures of Hungary produce some of the finest cattle in Europe. In some districts buffaloes are extensively used in farm-labor. Wild and domestic fowls are abundant and bees are extensively reared. Among the indigenous quadrupeds are the wolf, bear, fox, badger, lynx, wild-cat, roe, red deer, boar, chamois, ibex, etc. Among the characteristic birds of Hungary are the nightingale, sky-lark, and stork. Fish are plentiful in the rivers and lakes and the Theiss is reckoned the richest in fish of any river in Europe. The chief occupations are agriculture and cattle-rearing. Manufactures are still relatively unimportant, comprising woollens, linens, silks, leather, paper, tobacco, beer, and ironware, machinery, coaches, locomotives, and steel rails. The Hungarian mines, many of which have been worked since the Middle Ages, employ a large number of hands. Hundreds of vessels are engaged on the Danube in the transportation of produce and merchandise. The length of railroad lines was, in 1901, 10,360 miles; of telegraph lines, 13,770 miles. The economic development of Hungary in the last quarter of a century has proceeded with gigantic strides, and is evidenced by the introduction of all kinds of modern improvements in the cities and their architectural embellishment. Budapest has become one of the finest capitals of Europe.

The sovereign of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy is king of Hungary and governs the kingdom through a Hungarian ministry. (See AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.) The legislative power is vested in a diet (or parliament) of two houses, the upper house, known as the House of Magnates, and the lower house, or house of representatives. The former consists of princes (archdukes) of the reigning dynasty, hereditary peers, archbishops, bishops, and other ecclesiastical dignitaries (representing the various churches), life peers, various state dignitaries, and delegates from Croatia-Slavonia. The house of representatives consists of 453 members, of whom 40 are delegates from Croatia-Slavonia. The language of the diet, which until recently was Latin, is Hungarian, with the exception that the representatives of Croatia-Slavonia may speak their own language. The suffrage is limited by a property-income qualification.

Hungary is peopled by numerous distinct races, speaking different languages. The dominant race is that of the Magyars (or Hungarians), who belong to the Finnic branch of the Uralo-Altaic family of nations and whose language belongs to the so-called agglutinating type. The Magyar language is spoken by about 9,000,000 people, or nearly one-half of the total population of the Hungarian kingdom, but only about three-fourths of this number are Magyars by blood. The Slavic population of the kingdom numbers between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000. Of these somewhat more than half belong to the southern Slavs (Croats and Serbs), who dwell outside of Hungary proper, and the remainder to the northern Slavs (Slovaks and Ruthenians), the former, who inhabit the region of the northwestern Carpathians, comprising four-fifths of the number. Next to the Magyars and Slavs the most numerous element is that of the Wallachs (Rumanians), who number about 3,000,000 and constitute the bulk of the population of Transylvania. There are about 2,000,000 Germans in Hungary. The number of Jews is not far from 1,000,000. There is a considerable Gypsy population. Somewhat more than one-half of the inhabitants of Hungary are Roman Catholics; about one-fifth are Protestants; next in order come the Orthodox Greeks, the members of the United Greek Church, and the Jews. Of the Magyars more than one-half are Roman Catholics, the remainder belonging mainly to the Reformed Church. The seat of the Catholic primate of Hungary is Gran. The chief educational institution is the university of Budapest.

The southwestern and southeastern parts of Hungary belonged to the Roman Empire, being included in Pannonia and Dacia. At the time of the great migration of nations various Germanic tribes, and the Huns, Avars, and Slavs, made their way into these regions. The advent of the Magyars took place at the close of the ninth century. They came as a barbarous people, and for more than half a century their incursions made them the terror of Europe. After receiving chastisement at the hands of the Germans (933, 955), they began to settle down to a more peaceful existence, embraced Christianity, and became civilized. Their energetic ruler, Saint Stephen, assumed the title of king in 1000 and added Transylvania to his dominions. Under Matthias Corvinus (1458-90), the most enlightened ruler of the closing period of the Middle Ages, Hungary enjoyed great prosperity, but little more than a generation after his death the tide of Turkish invasion partly engulfed the country. From 1526, when Ferdinand I. of Hapsburg was elected king by part of the nobles, the history of Hungary has formed part of that of Austria. Turkish dominion in Hungary was brought to a close by the wars waged by Austria and her allies between 1683 and 1718. In 1687 the emperor Leopold I. forced the Hungarians to declare their crown hereditary in the Austrian dynasty. The Hungarians were successful in maintaining their constitutional liberties against the aggressions of the Hapsburg sovereigns until the revolutionary struggle of 1848-49, after which for a time Hungary was a subject province of Austria. In 1867, Hungary recovered its liberties, the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy being reconstituted on a dualistic basis.

Hu'ron, Lake (formerly pronounced hu-ron'), a body of water of the United States and Canada, the second in size of the five great lakes of North America communicating with the St. Lawrence River, lies between 43° and 46° 15' N. lat. and between 80° and 84° 40' W. lon., being bounded on the SW. by the state of Michigan and in other directions by the Canadian province of Ontario. It receives its main supplies from lakes Michigan and Superior, by the Straits of Mackinaw and St. Mary's River, and its outlet is the St.

Clair River. It is divided into two unequal portions by a long peninsula named Bruce Promontory (terminating in Cabot's Head) and the Manitoulin chain of islands. The parts to the N. and E. are called Manitou (i.e., the Great Spirit) Bay, or the North Channel, and Georgian Bay. With the exception of these bodies of water and Saginaw Bay, the outline of Lake Huron approaches in form very nearly to a crescent. Its position, lengthwise, is about SSE. and NNW., and the distance from one extremity to the other, following the curve, does not vary much from 280 miles. The greatest breadth, exclusive of Georgian Bay, is 105 miles; average breadth, 70 miles. Area, 23,000 sq. m. The surface of the water is elevated 8 feet above Lake Erie, 334 ft. above Lake Ontario, and 581 ft. above the level of the sea. The depth of Lake Huron is seemingly greater than that of any other in the chain, averaging, probably, not less than 700 ft., and increasing in a few places to 1500 or even 1700 ft. The waters are remarkably clear, especially towards the Straits of Mackinaw, and very pure and sweet. This lake is said to contain upward of 3000 islands. It is the reservoir of numerous streams and its coast affords some fine harbors. Like most of the other lakes in the chain, it is subject to fearful storms; but its navigation is not generally dangerous. The most important ports are Bay City, at the head of Saginaw Bay, in Michigan, and Goderich, Owen Sound, and Collingwood, in Ontario, the last two being on Georgian Bay. The outlet is between Port Huron and Sarnia.

Iceland (called Island, ee'lánd, by the natives; L. Ísland), an island subject to the crown of Denmark and situated between the North Atlantic and the Arctic oceans, 155 miles SE. of the nearest point of Greenland and 570 miles from the coast of Norway, extending between lat. 63° 24' and 66° 33' N. and lon. 13° 31' and 24° 30' W. Greatest length, from E. to W., 290 miles. Area, about 40,450 sq. m. The coast-line for a considerable extent on the SE. is almost unbroken, but in all other directions it presents a continued succession of deep bays, fjords, and jutting promontories. The water along the coast is generally deep, and the bays furnish a great number of harbors, with good anchorage and complete shelter. The interior of the island has for the most part a very wild and desolate appearance, being chiefly a volcanic highland, with an average elevation of about 2000 feet. Many of the higher summits are crowned with perpetual snow and ice, which, stretching down their sides into the intervening valleys, form immense glaciers. The snow-line varies in position between about 1300 ft. in the NW. and 3500-4000 ft. in the centre. The icy mountains, which take the common designation of Jökull, have their culminating point in Örfa Jökull, near the SE. coast, with an altitude of 6241 (6425) ft. The Snikfell, near the W. coast, is 4710 ft. Hecla, the noted volcano, is 5110 ft. in elevation. (See HECLA.) Skaptar Jökull, the eruption of which, in 1783, was one of the most violent in the records of volcanic outbreaks, occupies an immense tract in the SE. part of the island. The glaciers cover a surface of about 4000-5000 sq. m.; they exist on all the mountains above 4000 ft. in elevation, and extend down to the sea. The greatest mass of ice, known as the Vatnajökull, is in the SE. of the island; and this region has for centuries been the scene of the most violent volcanic eruptions. There are 100 or more volcanoes in Iceland, several of which have been active within a century. The island also contains numerous small mud-volcanoes and intermittent thermal springs, or geysers, the best known of which is the Geysir (or Great Geyser), which has given the name to the general phenomena represented by these waters. The Strokkur, which was initiated by an eruption in the early part of the eighteenth century, ceased its activity in 1896. The immense reservoirs of snow and ice furnish inexhaustible supplies to numerous lakes and rivers, but the latter, owing to the rugged nature of the surface, are more remarkable for their number than for their length. The most noted are the Hvítá (or White River), the Thjórsá, and the Jökulsá, the first two being each about 150 miles in length. The most valuable mineral product is sulphur; curtairbrand, or lignite, is also found. The other minerals deserving of notice are chalcodony, rock crystal, and the well-known double refracting spar, for which the island has long been famous. On many parts of the coast, particularly the W., basaltic caves occur; that of Stappen is not unworthy to be compared with Fingal's Cave.

The climate is variable. The temperature is more elevated than that of any other country in the same latitude; mean of year at Reykjavik, 40° Fahr.; of the summer, 56°, and of the winter, 29°. The S. coasts, washed by the Gulf Stream drift, are much milder than the N. and generally free from ice. Forests formerly abounded, but the island is now almost destitute of trees. Clumps or small woods of stunted beech and mountain-ash occur. The want of fuel is severely felt, although the Gulf Stream and the polar currents occasionally float driftwood to these shores, and a fine white turf is used. Except a few oats, and a kind of wild grass whose seeds are carefully garnered for food, no grain can be raised; but potatoes and garden-vegetables are cultivated. There are fine natural pastures and rich grass-fields surround the farms. The most important domestic animal is the sheep, which, with the goat, cow, horse, ox, and dog, was introduced from Norway. Reindeer, introduced in 1770, now exist in large herds, but are not domesticated. The polar bear is sometimes cast on the shores from the northern ice-fields. The fox is one of the commonest of the land animals. Fish (cod, herring, flounder) are very abundant on all the coasts and form an important part of the support of the inhabitants. Birds are very numerous, the most valuable of which is the eider-duck. No reptiles of any kind exist in the island. There are practically no manufactures, and most of the inhabitants live by breeding cattle and sheep. Until recently there were no roads in the island, and transport was effected almost exclusively over bridle-paths by horses. Good roads are now being constructed, together with bridges over the numerous streams.

The inhabitants belong to the Scandinavian race. Their language is peculiar to the island; it is more nearly allied to the old Norse than any other now spoken. They are strongly attached to their country and hospitable to strangers. Domestic education is universal and the intellectual capacity of the people is of a superior order. A university has recently been established in the capital city, where there are also a theological school (since 1847), medical school (since 1876, with a four years' course), and a general library, containing, besides other works, a complete collection of works in Icelandic literature. Iceland possesses a rich literature. Parts of the Edda appear to have been composed soon after the colonization of the island. Many of the most valuable works of European literature have been translated into the native tongue. Almost all the inhabitants are Lutherans, the whole island forming a single bishopric. In 1874 the 1000th anniversary of Iceland's history was celebrated at Reykjavik, the capital, on which occasion the island received its autonomy, but it still remains subject to the king of Denmark, who appoints its governor. It has its own legislature (Althing) and all its citizens are equal before the law. The trade of Iceland is chiefly restricted to Danish and Icelandic vessels, but the ports are open to commerce. The chief exports are fish, cod-liver oil, sheep and horses, mutton, wool, and eider-down.

Iceland was discovered by the Norwegians about 860 and permanently settled in 874, but is believed to have been known to the Irish fishermen and temporarily colonized by them before this period. The Norse settlement continued to increase rapidly by the arrival of new settlers, and early in the tenth century the inhabitants formed themselves into a republic, which existed for about 350 years. In the latter part of the thirteenth century Iceland became subject to Norway, and through it, in 1380, to Denmark, with which it still remains. Pop. in 1703, 50,444; in 1843, 57,180; in 1880, 72,445; in 1890, 70,927; in 1901, 78,489.

Idaho, í'de-ho, one of the northwestern states of the American Union, situated in the Pacific highland and principally in the basin of the Columbia River, is bounded N. by British Columbia and Montana, E. by Montana and Wyoming, S. by Utah and Nevada, and W. by Oregon and Washington. It lies between lat. 42° and 49° N. and lon.

111° and 117° 6' W. The crest of the Bitter Root Mountains forms the boundary on the NE. The W. boundary follows for about 180 miles the course of the Snake (Shoshone or Lewis) River. Area, 84,290 sq. m.

Surface.—The face of the country is principally mountainous, but there are several large prairie tracts. In the N. lateral spurs (the Kootenai, Cœur d'Alène, and Lapwai Mountains and others) extend westward from the Bitter Root range. Idaho is roughly divided by the Salmon River Mountains, whose snow-clad peaks exceed in some cases an altitude of 12,000 feet, into two portions, sometimes known as Northern and Southern Idaho. In the S. and SE., respectively, are the Goose Creek and Bear River Mountains, which form part of the watershed dividing the Snake River valley from the Great Salt Lake basin, in which the SE. part of the state lies. Northward of these ranges and of the Snake River, but SE. of the Salmon River Mountains, is the fertile Camas Prairie, and there are elsewhere great sage-plains and rocky desert. Great desert plains, or fields of basalt, cover a large part of the state S. of the Bitter Root and Salmon River Mountains, extending to the Snake River and occupying most of the region between the E. and W. boundaries. These great "Snake River Plains" are largely covered with drifting sands, which support a growth of arborescent artemisia. Towards the middle of this remarkable desert are the detached mountain prominences known as the "Three Buttes," which have long served as landmarks to the traveller. The chief rivers of the state are the Snake (a tributary of the Columbia) and its main branch, the Salmon. Remarkable points of interest are the Great Shoshone, American, and Salmon Falls, all cataracts of the Snake River. The first is, at high water, a rival of Niagara in magnificence, and the fall or perpendicular descent exceeds that of Niagara. (See SNAKE RIVER and SHOSHONE FALLS.) The great cañon of the Shoshone, where the river flows for many miles at the bottom of a vast trough or chasm in the rocks, is another noteworthy feature. There are many lakes and rivers, with fertile valleys, and picturesque waterfalls abound in the mountains. Evergreen (coniferous) trees cover some of the hills and mountains with a dense forest. Red cedar especially abounds in the N., and pines, fir, spruces, etc., are abundant in many districts; but hard-wood timber is, as a rule, very deficient.

Mineral Resources.—The various geological ages, from the Silurian to the Pliocene, are nearly all represented in the state, but none of them extensively so, except the Tertiary and the Post-Tertiary, whose strata and deposits cover large areas. The Azoic rocks are also largely represented. Idaho is one of the most important sources of supply of the precious metals. Gold was discovered on the Pend d'Oreille River in 1852; in 1860 placer-mining operations were undertaken on the South Fork of the Clearwater, and on the forks of the Cœur d'Alène River are the famous Cœur d'Alène mines, rich in gold, silver, and lead. Both quartz and placer gold is obtained in nearly all parts of the state, and there has been some dredging in the gold-bearing streams. The gold product for the year 1900 was valued at $1,727,000; the yield of silver was 6,500,000 fine ounces, with a valuation of $3,986,000; lead, 35,000 short tons. The yield of gold in 1903 was valued at $1,570,400, and of silver, $3,514,000. The copper product during the same period (largely increasing) was nearly 800,000 pounds. Coal (strictly a lignite, Tertiary or Cretaceous) is found at various points. Salt, sulphur, iron-ore, and building-stones are abundant.

Agriculture, etc.—Idaho is in general much better adapted for grazing than for agriculture. It has vast wastes covered with bunch-grasses and with "winter-fat" or "white sage" (Eurotia lanata), which is eagerly sought by cattle, and upon it they thrive and fatten even in winter. Notwithstanding the elevated character of the state, the winters are not often severe, considering the latitude; and even in the N. cattle may range in the valleys without shelter or foddering. The country, where not of a desert character, is well watered by rivers, and the soil when irrigated is wonderfully productive. Over 8,000,000 acres are reported as capable of successful irrigation, and of this number probably over 700,000 acres are now artificially watered. Among the mountains there are sheltered basins or parks, with fine soil and excellent pasturage. The principal agricultural crops for the year 1900 were: wheat, 3,104,629 bushels; oats, 1,349,845 bushels; barley, 399,012 bushels; potatoes, 684,080 bushels; and hay, 659,103 tons. There were estimated to be in the state, in the same year, 2,576,240 sheep, which gave wool (washed and unwashed) weighing 19,321,800 pounds. The total railroad mileage of the state was, in 1900, 1332.

Government.—The state constitution was adopted in 1889. The state officers are elected for terms of two years. The legislature holds biennial sessions. Idaho has 1 representative in the lower house of the national congress.

Education.—In 1900 there were 756 school-houses, with an attendance of 35,329 pupils. There were 7 public high-schools, 2 public normal-schools (at Albion and Lewiston), and a state university (the University of Idaho, located at Moscow), with about 185 students. An agricultural and mechanical college is located at Idaho Falls. There are a number of denominational colleges or academies at Caldwell, Lewiston, and Boise. There are Roman Catholic and other mission schools, chiefly among the Indians.

Counties and Towns, Population.—Idaho has 23 counties,—viz., Ada, Alturas, Bannock, Bear Lake, Bingham, Blaine, Boise, Canyon, Cassia, Custer, Elmore, Fremont, Idaho, Kootenai, Latah, Lemhi, Lincoln, Logan, Nez Percés, Oneida, Owyhee, Shoshone, and Washington. The principal towns are Boise (the capital), with 5957 inhabitants; Pocatello, 4046; Moscow, Lewiston, Wallace, Weiser, etc.

The total population in 1870 was 20,583, of whom 10,618 were whites. In 1880 the population was 32,610; in 1890, 84,385; and in 1900, 161,772. The native Indians belong mainly to the Shoshone, Nez Percés, Bannack, and Kootenai tribes, the total number located on reservation lands in 1900 having been 4226. There are in Idaho over 15,000 Mormons.

History.—In 1863 the territory of Idaho was formed, being set off mainly from Washington, Dakota, and Nebraska. It then included Montana and a great part of Wyoming. Idaho received its present limits in 1866, after having parted with a large share of its area in 1864. On July 3, 1890, it was admitted to the Union as a state.

Idaho, a county of Idaho, is bounded on the W. by the Snake (or Lewis) River and intersected by the Salmon River. The Lapwai Mountains extend along the N. border. The county has gold-mines (quartz and placer). Area, 11,074 sq. m. Capital, Mount Idaho. Pop. in 1890, 2955; in 1900, 6121.

Il'dertom, a post-village of Middlesex co., Ontario, 10 miles NW. of London, on the Grand Trunk R. Pop. 200.

Île aux Moines, eel é mwán, a small island of France, in the Gulf of Morbihan, Côtes-du-Nord, 12 miles N. of Lannion. It is the largest of the group called Sept Îles (or Seven Isles) and the only one which is inhabited.

Île Bonaparte. See RÉUNION.

Île d'Aix, eel daix, a small island off the W. coast of France, in Charente-Inférieure, 14 miles NW. of Rochefort. It has a fort and a fine roadstead.

Île de France, in the Indian Ocean. See MAURITIUS.

Île (Isle) de France, eel dph fróns ("Isle of France"), an old province of France, of which the capital was Paris, now included mainly in the departments of Seine, Seine-et-Oise, Seine-et-Marne, Aisne, and Oise. It was called an island because it was included between the rivers Seine, Marne, Aisne, Oise, and Ourcq.

Île de la Réunion. See RÉUNION.

Île des Faisans, eel dá fá'són' (i.e., "island of pheasants"), a small island, formed by the Bidassoa, on the borders of France and Spain, near Irún. Here the treaty of the Pyrenees was concluded between France and Spain, Sept. 7, 1659.

Île des Roches, eel dá rosh (i.e., "island of rocks"), one of the Seychelles Islands in the Indian Ocean.

Île du Diable. See ÎLES DU SALUT.

Île d'Yeu, or Isle-Dieu, eel de-uh', a fortified island of France, department of Vendée, in the Bay of Biscay, about 10 miles from the coast and 23 miles NW. of Les Sables d'Olonne. It is a mass of granite with an area of about 16 sq. m. It contains the little town of Yeu. Pop. about 3000.

Île l'Etoile, eel lá'twál', one of the Amirante Islands, in the Indian Ocean.

Iler, a post-village of Seneca co., Ohio. Pop. 80.

Ilerda, the ancient name of LERIDA.

Ilesboro, Me. See ISLESBORO.

Îles d'Institut, eel dâm'stee'tu', a group of islands off the NW. coast of Australia, opposite the entrance to Admiralty Gulf, respectively named after the distinguished French authors Fénelon, Montesquieu, Pascal, Descartes, Corneille, and Condillac.

Îles du Salut, eel dü sá'lu', a group of three islands off the coast of French Guiana, to which they belong. They have an elevation of from 100 to 200 feet. The climate is salubrious, with refreshing breezes. Here is located a French penal station, with administrative headquarters on Île Royale, nearest the main-land. Here are stores, an immense hospital, work-shops for convict-labor, a coaling-station, and a brick-yard. The light-house on the W. end is in lat. 5° 16' 50" N., lon. 52° 34' 31" W. To the seaward is the Île du Diable (or Devil's Island), noteworthy as the prison of Alfred Dreyfus, confined here in 1894-99. It is inhabited mainly by transported lepers. Between these two islands is the isle of St. Joseph, the third member of the group; it has abundant cocconut trees, and manufactures cocconut oil.

Ilesha, a native town of W. equatorial Africa, in the Yoruba country, 145 miles NE. of Lagos. Estimated pop. 40,000.

Iletsk, e-lét'sk', or Iletsky-Gorodok, a town of Russia, 78 miles SW. of Orenburg, at the confluence of the Ilek and Ural rivers. Pop. in 1897, 7277.

Ilets'kaya Zashtchi'ta, a town of Russia, 40 miles S. of Orenburg. It has large salt-mines. Pop. in 1897, 11,802.

Ifeld, il'fêlt, a town of Prussia, in Hanover, district of Hildesheim. It has a celebrated school dating from the middle of the sixteenth century. Pop. about 1250.

Iford, a town of England, in Essex, 5 miles NE. of London. It has extensive manufactures of photographic materials and is the seat of a vast lunatic asylum. Pop. in 1891, 10,900; in 1901, 41,250.

Ifracombe, il'frâ-koom, a town of England, co. of Devon, on its N. coast, 10 miles NW. of Barnstaple. It is a picturesque and fashionable bathing-resort and enjoys a delightful climate. It has pleasant promenades, including the famous Tors Walk. Pop. in 1901, 8557.

Iha das Roilhas, cel'yâ dâsh rôl'yâsh, a small Portuguese island in the Gulf of Guinea, just S. of the island of St. Thomas (São Thomé).

Iha do Principe. See PRINCE'S ISLAND.

Iha dos Ovos, cel'yâ dosh ôv'sh, an island of Brazil, state of Maranhão, at the entrance of the Bay of Cuma. Lat. 2° 4' S.

Iha dos Porcos, cel'yâ dosh por'kush, a group of islets of Brasil, off the coast of Rio de Janeiro, 16 miles NE. of the island of São Sebastião.

Iha Grande, cel'yâ grân'dâ (i.e., "great island"), an island of Brasil, state and 68 miles WSW. of Rio de Janeiro, in the Bay of Angra. Length, 15 miles; breadth, 8 miles. On its W. side is the village of Santa Anna.

Iha Grande, a town of Brasil. See ANGRA DOS REIS.

Ihas Verdes, the Portuguese for CAPS VERDES ISLANDS.

Ihavo, cel-yâ'vo, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 4 miles S. of Aveiro, near the Atlantic Ocean. Pop. in 1900, 12,545.

Iiheos, cel-yâ'ush, a group of small islands of Brasil, close to the coast of the state of Bahia, formerly called the Capitania of Jorge de Figueiro do Correa.

Iiheos, a maritime town of Brasil, state and 125 miles SSW. of the town of Bahia. Pop. about 6000.

Ili, a river of Central Asia, rises in the Tian-shan mountains, in Daungaria, flows generally W. and NW., and enters Lake Balkash, near its S. extremity, after a course of about 650-700 miles. It is navigable from its mouth for a distance of 400 miles. Its upper course is known as the Tekes. The most important town situated on its banks is Kulja.

Iliamna, e-lo-am'nâ, an active volcano of Alaska, W. of Cook Inlet and immediately N. of the parallel of lat. 60° N. Height, 12,066 feet. It was in eruption in 1901 and 1902.

Iliamna (or Shol'ikof) Lake, a lake of Alaska, about 75 miles long and 24 miles broad, discharges its waters by the Kwichak River into Bristol Bay.

Iligán, ce-lee-gân', a large bay on the N. coast of Mindanao, Philippine Islands. The Iligán River empties into the SE. corner. Here is Iligán town. Pop. 6020.

Ilije, il'e-jeh, or Iliidze, a watering-place of Bosnia, a few miles from Sarajevo.

Ilim, e-lim', a river of Siberia, tributary to the Angara. On it is Ilimsk, a fortified post, 300 miles N. of Irkutsk.

Iliniza, e-le-nee'sâ, a sub-equatorial mountain-peak of the western Andes, in Ecuador. Height, 17,400 feet.

Ilión, a banking post-village of Herkimer co., N.Y., on the S. bank of the Mohawk River, on the Erie Canal, and on the New York Central and Hudson River and the West Shore Rrs., 2 miles W. of Herkimer and 11 miles ESE. of Utica. It has a large armory for the manufacture of rifles, pistols, etc.; also manufactories of bicycles, typewriters, type-setting machines, farming-implements, and wagons. Pop. in 1900, 5138.

Iliissus, e-llr'stûs, a little stream which skirts Athens on the S. and joins the Cephissus.

Iliuliuk Harbor, Alaska. See UNALASKA.

Ilkinston, a municipal borough of England, in Derbyshire, 8 miles ENE. of Derby. It has an interesting parish church and is noted for its alkaline springs and baths. There are manufactures of silk, hosiery, lace, earthenware, etc. A considerable number of the inhabitants are also employed in mining coal and iron. Pop. in 1901, 25,383.

Ilkley, a town of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, 6 miles NW. of Otley, on the Wharfe. It is a popular watering-place. Pop. in 1901, 7455.

Ilkley, East, a town of England, in Berkshire, 9 miles N. of Newbury. It has important sheep markets. Pop. about 500.

Ille, a river of Alsace, rises near Altkirch, flows N., passing through Strassburg, and joins the Rhine. Length, over 100 miles. It is navigable for 62 miles.

Ille, a river of Vorarlberg, Austria-Hungary, falls into the Rhine 14 miles S. of the Lake of Constance. Total course, about 50 miles.

Ililabasco, Salvador. See COJUTEPEQUE.

Ilampu, il-yâm'poo, a name of the loftiest summit of the Eastern Cordillera of the Andes, in Bolivia, more generally known as Sorata. (See SORATA.) In a more accurate sense the name applies to one of the two peaks of this mountain, 21,275 feet in elevation.

Ilana, cel-yâ'nâ, a small town of Spain, New Castile, province of Guadalajara, 40 miles ESE. of Madrid.

Ilanaid, cel-yâ'na, a bay on the SW. coast of Mindanao, Philippine Islands. It is about 40 miles wide at the mouth and contains several harbors.

Ilapel, cel-yâ-pêl', a town of Chile, province of Coquimbo, on a stream of the same name, 110 miles N. by E. of Valparaiso. Pop. 3200. Gold has been mined here.

Illasi, il-lâ'zee, a village of Italy, 9 miles ENE. of Verona.

Ilau, il'îw (Hun. Ilava, il'îsh'vôh'), a town of Hungary, 10 miles NE. of Trencsîn, on the Waag. Pop. 2000.

Ilawara, a post-village of East Carroll parish, La. The banking point is Lake Providence.

Il'lawarra, a maritime district of New South Wales, 40-50 miles S. of Sydney, noted for its vegetation and beautiful scenery. It contains a fine lake or salt lagoon of the same name, which is connected with the ocean by a canal. Chief town, Wollongong.

Ille, cel, a river of France, in Ille-et-Vilaine, rises in the étang Boulet, flows S. 18 miles, and joins the Vilaine at Rennes.

Ille, a town of France, in Pyrénées Orientales, on the Tet, 10 miles ENE. of Prades. It is noted for its fruit, especially peaches and olives. Pop. about 3000.

Illecillewaet (or Great) Glacier, in the Selkirk Mountains of British Columbia, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile from Glacier House, on the Canadian Pacific R., having its origin in the snows and ice of Sir Donald. It is in a condition of recession.

Ille-et-Vilaine, cel & vee'lân', a department in the NW. of France, bordering on the English Channel, forming part of the old province of Brittany. It is named after the rivers Ille and Vilaine. Area, 2597 sq. m. The surface is mostly flat, but diversified in the N. with forests, dunes, and marshes. The chief rivers are the Vilaine, Ille, Couesnon, and Rance. Grain, tobacco, hemp, flax, and potatoes are important crops, and cider is extensively made. Fine cattle are reared. There are mines of iron and lead. Oysters are largely exported from Cancale. Capital, Rennes; principal port, Saint-Malo. Pop. in 1901, 613,567.

Iller, il'ler, a river of Germany, rises in Tyrol, flows mostly northward through Bavaria and along the frontier of Württemberg, and joins the Danube near Ulm. Length, about 100 miles.

Illertissen, il'ler-tis'sen, a town of Bavaria, in Swabia, on the Iller, 38 miles WSW. of Augsburg. Pop. about 1600.

Illescas, il-yê'skâs (anc. Ilacuris'), a small town of Spain, province of Toledo, 22 miles SW. of Madrid.

Illeiberis, the ancient name of ELKE.

Illeiberis, the ancient name of GRANADA.

Illiers, cel'yâ' or cel'yâ', a town of France, in Eure-et-Loir, on the Loir, 15 miles SW. of Chartres. Pop. about 2000 (commune, 3000).

Illimani, cel'yê-mâ'ne, one of the loftiest mountains of the Bolivian Andes, in the Eastern Cordillera (or Cordillera Real), about 30 miles ESE. of La Paz, whence its appearance is singularly imposing. It is a serrated ridge with three principal peaks, the loftiest of which, in lat. 16° 38' N., has an altitude of approximately 21,190 feet. The snowy part of the Eastern Cordillera begins with the gigantic mass of the Illimani, and proceeds in a continuous line of snow-clad peaks to the group of Vilcanota, where it unites with the Cordillera of the Coast. The mountain derives its name from being perpetually covered with snow. On its N. side it has glaciers above the height of 16,000 ft. On it, also, is the Lake of Illimani, nearly 16,000 ft. above the sea. The highest point of Illimani was reached by Conway in 1898.

Illinoia, il'in-oi' or il'in-oi's', a north-central state of the American Union, lying in the valley of the Mississippi River and in that of the Great Lakes, and bounded N. by Wisconsin, E. by Lake Michigan and Indiana, SE. by Kentucky, SW. by Missouri, and W. by Missouri and Iowa.

Lake Michigan washes its northeastern border; the Wabash River separates it in part from Indiana; from Kentucky it is divided by the Ohio River; and along its whole western limit flows the Mississippi River, separating it from Iowa and Missouri. Area, 56,000 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—Illinois is generally level, elevated from about 350 to 800 feet above the sea, and gently inclined to the south. Cairo, at the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, is at its lowest point, 267 ft. above the Gulf of Mexico; Silver Creek, one of the highest points of the state, is at an altitude of 1145 ft. Along the principal rivers there are some bluffs; in the NW. there is a broken tract of uneven country; and in the alluvial districts there are, in some places, deep valleys eroded by the action of streams. In the extreme S. there is a marked elevation which crosses the state from Shawneetown to Grand Tower, on the Mississippi, reaching a height of 850 ft. or more above sea-level. Another height of land runs from NNW. to SSE. across the state, crossing the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock. The prairie-country is in part very level, but more generally gently undulating. It is not very many years since this region was almost destitute of trees; but the area of woodland, which is most developed in the S., has extended somewhat as the result of tree-planting. As a rule, the natural forests include but few coniferous trees.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Mississippi, Ohio, and Wabash rivers afford important means of steam-communication. The principal river of the state is the Illinois, formed by the union of the Des Plaines and the Kankakee; by means of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, uniting with the Chicago River, it receives a supply of water from Lake Michigan and affords communication between the Great Lakes and the Mississippi. Its main tributaries have also been fitted, to some extent, for navigation. The rivers Sangamon, Kaskaskia, Fevre, Spoon, Rock, Embarras, and others have a limited extent of navigation. Peoria Lake is a beautiful expansion of the Illinois. In the NE. are several shallow lakes in a marshy region considerably resorted to by sportsmen and fowlers.

Climate.—The climate is quite varied, for the state extends N. and S. through five and a half degrees of latitude (from lat. 37° to 42° 30' N.), the northern limit having the latitude of Salem, Mass., and the southern extremity being farther S. than Petersburg, Va. The mean annual temperature is, therefore, about 11° Fahr. higher in the S. than in the N., while the variation is greater in the N. The summers and winters are both apt to be severe, and the extremes of temperature (normal) are about 104° and —10° to —15°. The average rainfall over most of the region is about 38 inches. In the S., especially on the Mississippi bottom-lands, paludal fevers are apt to prevail during certain seasons of the year.

Mineral Resources.—Of the total area of Illinois, about two-thirds belongs to the productive coal-field, but nearly all the state is deeply overlaid by the drift. The extreme S. of the state is Tertiary and Post-Tertiary; but the greater portion of the area is of Paleozoic age (Silurian-Carboniferous). The coals of Illinois are widely distributed, abundant, and easily accessible; all are bituminous. In 1899 Illinois stood second among the states of the Union in the mining of coal, with a production of 24,439,019 short tons. In 1900 there were in operation 920 mines, and in 1903 the coal product amounted to 36,957,104 short tons. The iron-ores of the state are mostly of inferior quality, but are improved by admixture with ores from other states. The production of pig-iron in 1903 aggregated 1,692,375 long tons; of Bessemer steel, 1,366,569 tons; and of open-hearth steel, 423,919 tons. Galena-ores are found chiefly in the NW., where they are largely associated with zinc, the annual product being about 30,000 tons. Copper-ores, gypsum, and marble are found at various points. Saline, sulphur, and chalybeate springs occur, mainly southward.

Agricultural Resources, etc.—Few states of the Union exceed Illinois in agricultural capabilities. In 1900 91 per cent. of the land area was in farms, of which upward of 84 per cent. was improved. Spring and winter wheat, corn and other cereals, live-stock, hay, and dairy products are the principal articles of export. The production of the principal crops was, in 1900, corn, 264,176,226 bushels; wheat, 17,982,068 bushels; oats, 133,642,884 bushels; barley, 342,144 bushels; rye, 1,270,684 bushels; potatoes, 15,296,104 bushels; and hay, 2,119,419 tons.

Fruit-culture is carried on in nearly every part of the state; but the hilly belt of the extreme S. is regarded as the best section for this industry. Here the production of apples, peaches, pears, and the small fruits is the leading pursuit. In the southernmost counties cotton has been successfully grown. Stock-raising is a most important pursuit in the state, which in the number of horses (over 1,000,000), milk-cows (1,000,000), and hogs (upward of 5,000,000) stands nearly first among the states of the Union. The value of the dairy products was, in 1899, $29,640,000.

Manufactures.—Illinois stands next to New York and Pennsylvania as the third manufacturing state of the Union. The leading manufactures are those of iron, steel, steel rails, machinery, castings, pig-lead and zinc, flour, cement, lime, brick, drain-tile, boots, shoes, clothing, hardware, glass-ware, watches, wooden-ware, cooperage, lumber, furniture, farming-implements, bridge-work of wood and iron, carriages and railroad-cars, electrical appliances, bicycles, automobiles, leather, saddlery, tobacco, lard, oil, soap, whiskey, malt and malt liquors, woollens, hosiery, and the coarser and simpler kinds of manufactured goods, which are largely produced in nearly all parts of the state. Chicago, Peoria, Aurora, Elgin, Joliet, Jacksonville, Rockford, Dixon, Bloomington, and many other towns have large manufacturing interests. The value of the manufactures of iron and steel was, in 1900, $60,144,081; of liquors, $57,941,897; agricultural implements, $42,033,796; and men's clothing, $37,278,717. Peoria is the centre of the liquor-industry and stands first among the cities of the Union in the production of whiskeys and high-wines. The most important industry of the state is that of slaughtering and meat-packing, the centre of which is Chicago, and of which the product in 1900 was valued at $287,922,277.

Fisheries.—The fisheries of the state centre chiefly at Chicago. Lake Michigan produces wall-eyed pike, several kinds of bass, pike, salmon-trout, white-fish, sucker, carp, sauger, lake-herring (a white-fish), sturgeon, etc. The Mississippi and its tributaries yield wall-eyed pike, pike-perch, buffalo-fish, sturgeon, paddle-fish, and other species, many of them utilised as food-fishes.

Railroads.—Trunk lines connect all the important towns with one another and with the cities in the adjacent states, extending in every direction, while of the minor or subsidiary roads and branches there are a great number. In 1846 there were 22 miles of railroad in the state; in 1850, 111; in 1855, 687; in 1860, 2790; in 1870, 4623; in 1880, 7851; in 1890, 10,130; in 1900, 10,997. The first railroad in the state was the Sangamon and Morgan, a part of which was opened in 1839. At present the railroad service is so effective and so cheap that the transportation of freight upon the rivers Ohio and Mississippi, formerly very extensive, is greatly reduced. The lake commerce, centring chiefly at Chicago, extends, via the Canadian canals and the river St. Lawrence, to the Atlantic ports and to Europe (direct).

Education.—The leading educational institution of the state is the University of Chicago, which was opened in 1892 and which is attended by upward of 3000 students. The State University (University of Illinois) is situated at Urbana and Champaign, and the Northwestern University at Chicago. Among the minor collegiate and technical institutions are the Armour Institute of Technology and Rush Medical College at Chicago, Knox College at Galesburg, and the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington. There are normal schools at Carbondale, Charleston, Chicago, Dekalb, Dixon, Macomb, and Normal. There are institutions for the blind and for deaf-mutes at Jacksonville; insane hospitals at Jacksonville, Elgin, Chicago, Anna, Peoria, and Watertown; reform schools at Pontiac and Chicago; a state institution for feeble-minded youth at Lincoln; an asylum for insane criminals at Chester; a soldiers' orphans' home at Normal; a soldiers' widows' home at Wilmington; and at Joliet is the state penitentiary, where the convicts are instructed and made to earn enough to pay the expenses of the institution.

Counties.—Illinois had in 1900 102 counties, as follows: Adams, Alexander, Bond, Boone, Brown, Bureau, Calhoun, Carroll, Cass, Champaign, Christian, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Coles, Cook, Crawford, Cumberland, Dekalb, Dewitt, Douglas, Dupage, Edgar, Edwards, Effingham, Fayette, Ford, Franklin, Fulton, Gallatin, Greene, Grundy, Hamilton, Hancock, Hardin, Henderson, Henry, Iroquois, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Jersey, Jo Daviess, Johnson, Kane, Kankakee, Kendall, Knox, Lake, LaSalle, Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Logan, Macon, Macoupin, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Mason, Massac, McDonough, McHenry, McLean, Menard, Mercer, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Moultrie, Ogle, Peoria, Perry, Platt, Pike, Pope, Pulaski, Putnam, Randolph, Richland, Rock Island, Saline, Sangamon, Schuyler, Scott, Shelby, Stark, St. Clair, Stephenson, Tazewell, Union, Vermilion, Wabash, Warren, Washington, Wayne, White, Whiteside, Will, Williamson, Winnebago, and Woodford.

Cities.—The principal cities are Chicago, on Lake Michigan (pop. in 1890, 503,185; in 1890, 1,099,850; in 1900, 1,698,575); Springfield, the capital (pop. in 1900, 34,159); Peoria, on the Illinois River, 56,100; Quincy, 36,352; Rockford, 31,051; Joliet, 29,353; East St. Louis, 29,656; Bloomington, 23,286; Aurora, 24,147; Elgin, 20,754; Decatur, 22,433. Other places of importance are Belleville, Galesburg, Rock Island, Jacksonville, Moline, Danville, Streator, Cairo, Alton, Freeport, Ottawa, LaSalle, Kankakee, and Galena.

Constitution.—The present constitution was adopted in 1870. Judges are chosen by the people and hold their office for limited terms. The General Assembly consists of a Senate whose members are elected for 4 years and a House of Representatives, elected for 2 years. There is a system of minority representation in the election of representatives. Most of the state executive officers, including the governor, are chosen for four years. The state sends 25 representatives to the lower house of the Federal Congress.

History.—The name of the state is derived from that of the Illinois confederacy of Indian tribes, chiefly Algonquins, who once inhabited a large part of this state, although the Sacs, Foxes, Iowas, etc., lived in the north. In 1673 the French explorer Joliet descended the Mississippi past what is now Illinois, and in 1675 Father Marquette founded a mission among the Kaskaskia Indians. In 1679 La Salle entered this region from Canada and founded Fort Crèvecoeur on the Illinois River. A few years later French traders made their appearance. Kaskaskia was the first permanent European settlement in the Mississippi Valley. The French lived at peace with the Indians, but the settlements did not increase greatly in population under their system. In 1763 occurred the cession of Canada to England, and with it the Illinois country was held to have passed under English sway. In 1787 the United States government organized the Northwest Territory, and in 1800 the Indiana Territory, to each of which in succession Illinois belonged. In 1809 Illinois Territory was set off, extending northward to British America. In 1818 the state was admitted to the Union, with its present limits. A great stream of immigrants poured into the fertile region. The period from 1830 to 1850 witnessed the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal and the rise of Chicago from a small village to a great emporium of commerce. The Mormon troubles occurred in 1840-44. The important land-grant of 1850 made by Congress in aid of the Illinois Central Railroad was the means of greatly stimulating the development of the resources of the state. During the Civil War Illinois was the principal granary and feeder of the United States armies. In 1871 occurred the great fire at Chicago. In 1893 the Columbian Exposition was held in that city. Illinois has given two presidents to the United States, Lincoln and Grant.

Population.—The population in 1800 was 2458; in 1810, 12,282; in 1820, 56,163; in 1830, 157,446; in 1840, 476,183; in 1850, 851,470; in 1860, 1,711,951; in 1865, 2,141,510; in 1870, 2,539,891; in 1880, 3,077,871; in 1890, 3,826,351; in 1900, 4,821,550. The foreign-born population in 1900 was 966,747. The Germans constitute the largest foreign element.

Illinois Bayou, Pope co., Ark., runs southwestward and enters the Arkansas River about 12 miles SW. of Dover. It is nearly 75 miles long.

Illinois Bend, a post-village of Montague co., Tex. The banking point is Saint Jo. Pop. about 100.

Illinois City, a post-village of Rock Island co., Ill., 8 miles E. by S. of Muscatine, Iowa, and 1 mile from the Mississippi River. Pop. about 200.

Illinois River rises in Benton co., Ark., and runs nearly southwestward into Indian Territory. It enters the Arkansas River about 22 miles below Tahlequah, which is on this river.

Illinois River is formed by the Des Plaines and Kankakee rivers, which unite in Grundy co., Ill., about 10 miles from Morris. It runs westward through LaSalle co., further on has a generally S. and SW. course, and enters the Mississippi River about 18 miles above Alton. The length of the main stream is estimated at 350 miles. It is the largest river that traverses the state and is navigable through its whole extent. The chief towns on its banks are Peoria, Ottawa, LaSalle, and Pekin. Its principal tributaries are the Fox and Sangamon rivers. The river is connected by the Illinois and Michigan Canal, starting from LaSalle, with a branch of the Chicago River (South Branch) and thus makes uninterrupted water communication with Lake Michigan. The great Chicago Drainage Canal also joins the waters of the Des Plaines (leaving at Lockport) with the Chicago South Branch.

Illinois River, a small river of Oregon, rises in Josephine co., runs NW., and enters the Rogue River in Curry co.

Illopolis, a banking post-village of Sangamon co., Ill., on the Wabash R., 23 miles E. by N. of Springfield. Pop. in 1900, 744.

Ilkirch-Grafenstaden, Il'kēx grā'fən-stā'dən, a village of Germany, in Alsace, 5 miles S. of Strassburg. Pop. in 1900, 6111.

Illman, il'ndw, Umrn, 55n'ter, and Omer, o'ber, two nearly contiguous villages of Switzerland, canton and 9 miles ENE. of Zürich, on the Kempt.

India, a vast empire belonging to the British crown, consisting of the great central peninsula of southern Asia, an extensive region to the N. of the peninsula, and a narrow strip along the E. side of the Bay of Bengal. A part of this empire (Burma) belongs geographically to Indo-China, and another part, W. of the Indus, lies outside of India in the physical sense. In a broader sense, India includes the whole of Indo-China, to which the name Farther India has been applied. The name Hindustan was formerly used as synonymous with India (in the narrower sense), and in a more proper signification (in its original sense) has designated the north-central part of India (the region of the upper Ganges basin, with part of the Punjab), the land par excellence of the Hindus. British India is bounded on the N. by Eastern (Chinese) Turkestan, Tibet (from which it is separated by the Himalaya Mountains), Nepal, and Bhutan; on the W. by Afghanistan and Beluchistan, on the E. by China and Siam; and on the other sides by the Indian Ocean (mainly the Bay of Bengal and the Arabian Sea). The peninsula of India terminates in Cape Comorin, in lat. 8° 5' N. Off its extremity lies the large island of Ceylon, which is not included in the Indian empire. On the N. the Indian realm extends to where the Hindu Kush and Karakorum meet, in about lat. 36° 30' N. Its length, from N. to S., is about 2000 miles, and the extreme breadth, from E. to W. (if we include all of Beluchistan now under British control), is about equal. India comprises many native states besides the territory directly subject to British rule. Over these the British have control, but they allow the native prince to govern, guaranteeing external protection and internal tranquillity upon payment of an annual tribute. Some of them are required to provide a native force, placed at the disposal of the British. For administrative and political purposes, the possessions of the British Empire in India (provinces and native states) are distributed as follows:

The peninsula of India has a very regular coast-line of about 3000 miles, the gulfs of Cambay and Cutch, on the W., being the only indentations of any extent, and is very deficient in harbors. In physical features India is extremely diversified, consisting (exclusive of the regions formerly constituting the kingdom of Burma) of three distinct parts,—a peninsular table-land, a vast circumvallation of mountains, and a series of low plains. The table-land occupies generally the space between the coast ranges and agglomerated hills of what have been designated the Eastern and Western Ghats and the Vindhya Mountains on the N.; it has a mean height of 1400 to 3000 feet, and its surface is sprinkled over with isolated conical hills, rising to 2000 ft. above the plain, or 4000 to 5000 ft. above the sea. This table-land is divided into two portions,—the Deccan in the N., between the Nerbudda and Kistna (Kriahna) rivers, including the valley of Berar; and the plateau of Mysore, between the Kistna River and the Nilgiri Hills. A large portion of this region (the Deccan), whose general slope, as indicated by the drainage, is towards the E., is occupied by a basaltic trap formation (dating from the Cretaceous period), the thickness of which in some parts is not less than 6000 ft., and to the disintegration of which is due the remarkably fertile soil which has so generously lent itself to the cultivation of cotton and the cereals. Between this and the Himalayas lies the immense Gangetic plain in the E., comprehending the vast tract of level country drained by the Ganges and its affluents, the lower part of which is annually submerged for several months. This plain, which is in greater part constructed of the detrital material derived from the denudation of the Himalayas, and seems to have had little or no existence before the uplift (at various times in the Tertiary period) of the great mountain bulwark, is exceedingly fertile and the most thickly populated portion of India. In the W. the great sandy desert called the Thurr (Thar), intersected by the Indus, extends from the Punjab to the Runn of Cutch, a distance of about 500 miles, with a similar breadth, forming part of the generally arid region extending into Central Asia and northern Africa. Gradually rising towards the interior it unites with the "height of land" (no separating mountain) which forms the low Indo-Gangetic divide. The culminating points of the peninsular portion of India are found in the Nilgiri (Doda-betta, 8760 ft.) and the Anamalli Hills of the Cardamum Mountains, near the extreme south (7700 ft.). The great mountain-bulwark of the Himalayas in the N., which presents a practically unbroken wall between the Pamir and the headstreams of the Irawadi, and is penetrated by passes rarely falling below 17,000 ft. and often rising to upward of 20,000 ft., contains the loftiest mountain-summits of the globe (Everest, 29,002 ft.; Godwin-Austen or Dapang, known also as Peak K<sup>2</sup>, Kunohinjunga, Dhaulagiri, etc.). It is broken through by the Indus, Sutlej, Ganges, and Brahmaputra. See HIMALAYA MOUNTAINS and KARAKORUM.

The largest rivers of India are the Indus, Sutlej, and Chenab (tributaries of the Indus), Ganges, Jumna (affluent of the Ganges), Brahmaputra, Irawadi and Salwin (both in Burma), Godavery, Kistna, and Nerbudda. The Indus, with its magnificent tributaries which intersect the Punjab, and the Ganges (with its affluents, the Jumna, Gumti, Gogra, Gunduk, etc.) and the Brahmaputra derive their chief supplies from the melting of the snows on the Himalayas. The Godavery and Kistna, the principal streams of the peninsular part of India flowing towards the Bay of Bengal, originate in the western mountains, and are fed by the rains which fall over these, to the extent of 100 inches or more, during June, July, and August. Whether fed by snow or by rain, these rivers are in flood at the same period of the year, and their waters are sent to the ocean through tracts of the finest country in the world. Canals for irrigation have been constructed in India on a gigantic scale.

The climate of India is very varied. The temperature varies extremely, according to latitude and elevation. On the plains in the S. showers are frequent at all seasons; in central India the rains are extremely light; in the N. there are both summer and winter rains; in Sindh (on both sides of the lower Indus) there is no rainy season, and showers fall only at intervals of years. Near the level of the sea the annual rainfall is at Madras 52, at Bombay 75, and at Calcutta 66 inches. On the highlands, again, the rainfall is immense: at Cherpa Punji, in the Khasi Hills, in Assam, it is 500-600 inches in a year,—indeed, has reached the extraordinary figure of upward of 800 inches. As the result of this, the productiveness of the different regions presents the most striking contrasts. In the upper and arid regions of Bengal famine recurs at regular intervals of eighteen or nineteen years, and in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh at intervals of seven to ten years; while in the moist alluvial plains food products are superabundant. The heat is intense in the region of the plains, whereas in the hilly and mountainous regions, 3000 to 7000 feet above the sea, the climate is healthy, and there sanatoria are established as a refuge from the heat of the lowlands. At Madras the average temperature of the hottest month (May) is 87° and at Calcutta 83°; of the coldest month, 76° and 66°. At Darjiling Pass, at an elevation of 7100 feet, the July temperature is about 61°. In the N. of the Indian Ocean, the SW. monsoon blows from March to October; the NE. monsoon succeeds, and continues from October to March. The SW. monsoon brings foul weather, and the wind blows with greater force during this than during the NE. monsoon, when the sky is generally clear.

The vegetation of India is exceedingly varied, as would naturally be expected in a tropical region of so vast a latitudinal extent and extending through so many climatic zones. Subarctic types are found in the upper mountain tracts, where stray flowering plants are still met with at elevations of 17,000-18,000 feet. Forests no longer occupy any very large extent of territory, except in central India and along the mountain slopes, and much of the remaining forest tract is now under government protection. Among the more useful trees are the teak, sandal, blackwood, shores, deodar, and various other cedars and conifers, numerous species of palm, the oak, etc. The bamboo is one of the most serviceable products of the jungle. Among the remaining vegetable types mention should be made of the magnolia, rhododendron, camphor, and fig (banian).

Extensive tracts of country are covered with dense jungles, and at the mouths of the rivers, especially in the delta of the Ganges, immense marshes, with a thick rank vegetation, are the resort of formidable wild animals. The fauna of India comprises various apes, the tiger, leopard, lion (in the NW.), several species of bear, wild-dog, rhinoceros, buffalo, elephant, numerous large and small deer and antelope; birds of brilliant plumage (pheasants, peacock, trogons, finches, pigeons); the gavia among crocodiles; the cobra and a host of other venomous serpents, to whose fatal bite from 18,000 to 22,000 of the inhabitants annually fall victims.

The chief vegetable products of India are wheat, rice, and other cereals, cotton, jute, sugar, indigo, opium, oil-seeds, tobacco, tea, and timber. Wheat is grown in most abundance in the Punjab and in the United Provinces; barley and millet are extensively consumed by the population throughout the peninsula; rice is the staple food of the inhabitants of Bengal and Burma. Cotton is most largely grown in the central area of the peninsula, but is not restricted to it; its cultivation has shown marked advances during the last 50 years. The sugar-cane is grown nearly all over the peninsula and in Bengal and the United Provinces. Indigo is still cultivated in Bengal proper, where it is a staple product, but it no longer holds its former importance. Opium is a government monopoly and its cultivation is restricted to certain regions, notably the Gangetic country about Benares. Tea has been grown for years in Assam and lower Bengal, and it is also cultivated over extensive tracts on the slopes of the Himalayas, where it grows at an elevation of 5000 feet. Tea is grown also in the Nilgiris, where to a certain extent coffee is also cultivated; and the cinchona plant has been successfully introduced there, at Darjiling, and in other localities.

The total acreage under crops was, in 1900-01, 198,300,000, of which 20,165,000 acres were given over to the cultivation of wheat; 92,500,000 to other food grains; 70,100,000 to rice; 12,950,000 to oil-seeds; 9,600,000 to cotton; 2,575,000 to sugar-cane; 1,000,000 to tobacco; 984,000 to indigo; and 502,000 to tea.

The mineral resources of India comprise the ores of iron, copper, lead, and tin (southern Burma), seemingly only limited quantities of silver and gold (chiefly in Mysore), fairly extensive deposits of coal (Damodar region of western Bengal, the Nerbudda and Godavery valleys), petroleum, salt, and various precious stones, as the diamond (now only scantily found) and ruby (Burma). The output of coal was, in 1901, 6,635,727 tons, representing the work of 427 collieries.

The exports include cotton, rice, seeds, jute, hides and skins, opium, tea, wheat, lac, coffee, indigo, raw wool, wood, oils, saltpetre, silks, provisions, ores and metals, chemicals and drugs, textile fabrics, metal-manufactures, etc. The exports (including precious metals) in the year 1902-03 amounted to £92,700,000; the imports, to £74,100,000. About one-half of the exports go to Great Britain, the British possessions, and China. Germany, France, the United States, and Egypt together take about one-fourth. The bulk of the remainder goes to Japan, Belgium, Italy, and Austria-Hungary. The bulk of the imports come from Great Britain. All but about 5 per cent. of the foreign trade of India is by sea. There were, in 1901-02, 193 cotton-mills in operation, 35 jute-mills, 4 woollen-mills, and 9 paper-mills, employing collectively about 292,000 hands.

Great public works have been executed in India by the British, mainly in the way of canals, constructed chiefly for irrigation purposes, and of a magnificent system of railways, in making which the greatest engineering difficulties have been overcome. The number of miles operated by the railways was, in 1900, 25,373.

In consequence of large expenditure for public works, famine-relief, etc., the public debt of the empire is large, and taxation, though apparently light, bears heavily upon a people where the rate of wages is so low as in India.

The king of England bears the title of Emperor of India. The administration of the Indian Empire in England is vested in the secretary of state for India (a member of the cabinet), who is assisted by a council. At the head of the government in India is the governor-general and viceroy, who is appointed by the crown and is assisted by a council. The various departments of the executive are entrusted to the members of the council, except the department of foreign affairs, which is directly under the governor-general. The governor-general's council is expanded by the appointment of a large number of additional members into a legislative council, which is empowered to make laws for India. Of the various provinces of India, two, Madras and Bombay, are administered by governors appointed by the crown. The remaining divisions are under lieutenant-governors and chief commissioners. These are appointed by the governor-general, the lieutenant-governors with the approval of the crown. The rulers of the native states have no right to make war or peace or to maintain diplomatic relations with each other or any foreign power. There were, in 1900, 764 municipal towns, embracing a population of 16,500,000. These municipalities enjoy a large degree of autonomy, the local governing bodies in the large towns and in many of the smaller ones being elected by the rate-payers. The capital of India is Calcutta. About 225,000 men (exclusive of about 25,000 volunteers) are employed in the British military service of India, and one-third of them are Europeans.

In this extensive country a great diversity of language prevails. In northern India the numerous and various dialects are of Indo-European stock, allied in roots to the Sanskrit, the most important being Hindi and Bengali, the former spoken by about 90,000,000 people and the latter by upward of 40,000,000. Punjabi, a modern Hindu dialect, is the language of the bulk of the people of the Punjab. In southern India the leading tongues are Telugu, Tamil, Canarese, and other Dravidian languages and Mahrathi. The Mahrathi, a mixed tongue, is the language of the Mahrattas (in Gwalior, Indore, Baroda, the Deccan, etc.). Hindustani, the lingua franca of India, is an adulterated form of Hindi, having many Persian, Arab, Turkish, and Dravidian words. Brahmanism prevails throughout India proper, the next most important religion being Mohammedanism, which numbers more adherents than are to be found in all the rest of Asia. Buddhism is the religion of Burma and of some of the tribes on the slopes of the Himalayas. Devil-worship and fetish-worship prevail among the aboriginal tribes. In the Punjab, which was subjected to British rule in 1849, the inhabitants are partly Sikhs, or disciples of Nanak, who bear an implacable hatred to the Mohammedans, the most numerous class there. Of the total population of 294,000,000 (census of 1901), the numbers assigned to the various religions are about: Hindus, 207,000,000; Mohammedans, 62,000,000; Buddhists, 9,000,000; Animistics (spirit-worshippers), nearly 9,000,000; Christians, 3,000,000; Sikhs, 2,000,000; Jains, upward of 1,000,000. There are about 100,000 Parsis and about 20,000 Jews. The aboriginal races of India have no literature and almost no traditions. The Mohammedan invasion of India began at the beginning of the eleventh century and was completed in the sixteenth century; but most of the Mohammedans now in India spring from a Brahmanical stock. The Parsis (Zoroastrians) are descended from refugees from religious persecution in Persia. Though small in number, they have in Bombay earned a distinguished name for public munificence, as well as success in commerce; and they have led the way in the cause of female education. The government of India has been devoting much attention to education. English is taught in all schools and is highly prized by the native youth of India as a means towards gaining employment in government and mercantile offices. But a very small fraction of the population, however, has the benefit of school instruction. At the head of the system of higher education are the examining bodies known as the universities of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, and the Punjab, which have a large number of colleges affiliated with them. In 1901 but 9 cities in India returned a population of over 200,000. They were Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Hyderabad, Lucknow, Rangoon (Burma), Benares, Delhi, and Lahore. The number of cities having a population exceeding 50,000 was 75. India abounds in magnificent monuments of Mohammedan art (mosques, mausoleums, palaces), in remarkable rock-cut Hindu and Buddhist temples, and in the ruins of great cities. In the regions where resort is had to artificial irrigation the vast water-tanks, in places miles in circuit, excite the wonderment of the traveller.

The invasion of India by the Aryans (Indo-Europeans), of which family the Hindus form a branch, occurred in prehistoric times. The sacred books of the Hindus known as the Vedas date from a period antecedent by many centuries to the beginning of the Christian era. At the dawn of history there were many independent Hindu states in India, the most famous of which was Magadha. Buddha lived about 500 B.C. In the third century B.C. Buddhism obtained a firm foothold, and it continued to spread until several centuries after the beginning of the Christian era, when Hinduism reasserted itself. Alexander the Great made a victorious advance into India in 326 B.C. About two centuries later the Græco-Bactrian realm was extended into the valley of the Indus and that of the upper Ganges. The first invasion of Mahmud of Ghazni in 1001 inaugurated the period of Mohammedan conquest. The Mohammedan empire of the Great Mogul was established by Baber, a descendant of Tamerlane, in 1526. Under his successors, the most celebrated of whom were Akbar and Aurungzebe, this realm attained an extraordinary height of splendor, and Agra and Delhi assumed in modern Mohammedan art the place occupied by Bagdad and Cordova in the Middle Ages. In 1498 India was reached by way of the Cape of Good Hope by the Portuguese navigator, Vasco da Gama. In 1510 the Portuguese took Goa, which rose to be a great centre of commerce. The English East India Company was chartered in 1600 and the French East India Company in 1664. An English factory was established at Surat in 1612. In 1662 Portugal transferred Bombay to England, and in 1686 an English factory was established at Calcutta. The middle of the seventeenth century witnessed the rise of the Mahratta power. The struggle for supremacy between France and England (1745-65) was decided in favor of the English, who soon built up a mighty empire. In 1765 the Mogul emperor made a formal cession of Bengal and other territories to the English East India Company. Warren Hastings was installed as first governor-general in 1774, and in 1784 a Board of Control was created for India. In 1792-99 the kingdom of Mysore was destroyed by the British, and in 1801 they annexed the Carnatic, a country on the E. coast of the Indian peninsula, which had been ruled by the nawabs of Arcot. In 1803-18 the Mahrattas succumbed to the British arms. Sindh was annexed in 1843, the Punjab in 1849, and Oudh in 1856. The mutiny of the Sepoys (or native soldiers) in the service of the East India Company, in 1857-58, came near putting an end to the British dominion, and in 1858 the government of India was transferred to the crown. In 1876 Victoria assumed the title of Empress of India. In 1885-86 Burma was conquered and annexed.

Indiana, a north-central state of the American Union, extending from Lake Michigan to the Ohio River, bounded on the N. by Lake Michigan and the state of Michigan, on the E. by Ohio, on the SE. and S. by Kentucky, and on the W. by Illinois. Its northern limit is the parallel of 41° 46' N. lat. The entire southern boundary is formed by the Ohio River, and on the SW. the Wabash River separates the state, in part, from Illinois. Area of the land-surface, 35,910 sq. m., and of the appertaining waters, 440 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The surface is on the whole level and has generally a slight southern slope. In the extreme NW. is a sandy tract, covered with dunes, to the southward of which occurs a flat region, containing much marsh-land and a number of shallow lakes. The NE. also has a number of small lakes and tarns. Northward from the White and Wabash rivers the country is generally level or gently rolling, and much of the soil is exceedingly fertile. In the E. and SW. there is much broken and bluff land, especially near the streams, where the country is still partially wooded. The highest elevations probably nowhere reach 1500 feet. The timber of the state is very generally of the hard-wood kinds. Oak abounds, especially northward. Ash, hickory, maple, whitewood, black walnut, and other useful trees are plentiful. Of coniferous trees, the NW. affords pines; tamarack trees abound in many marshy regions, and the cypress grows in the SW.

Rivers.—The chief streams, besides the Ohio, are the Wabash, which, with its tributaries (the White, Tippecanoe, El, Missisnawa, and other streams), drains the greater part of the state; the Whitewater, tributary to the Ohio; Little and Big Pigeon, also tributary to the Ohio; the St. Joseph, Maumee, Kankakee, etc. The only lake of considerable size is English Lake, which is a part of the upper waters of the Kankakee.

Geology, Minerals, etc.—A large portion of the state is covered by glacial drift. The northwestern and eastern parts belong to the Silurian system. Between these areas that system is mainly overlaid by Devonian and Carboniferous strata, and in the limestone regions of the S. occur some remarkable and interesting caves. In the SW. and W. there are important coal-fields. The "block coal," a valuable non-caking or splint coal, is highly prized for its adaptation to the manufacture of steel and the better grades of iron. There are good coking-, gas-, and cannel-coals, which together underlie an area of several thousand square miles. The output of coal in 1901 was 6,918,225 short tons; in 1903, 10,794,692 tons. The field of natural gas is one of the largest in the world, but it would seem from the diminution in pressure that before many years the supply of gas might be exhausted. The number of wells in 1903 was 5514. The production of petroleum was, in 1903, 9,186,411 barrels, valued at $10,474,127. The iron-product has become very considerable; but the ores are mainly from the Lake Superior region or from Missouri and Tennessee. Bog-ore and local deposits of higher grades of iron exist, however, and in some places have been wrought. Other minerals are fire-brick and stoneware clays, kaolin, limestone, and good sandstone. Salt springs exist, and other springs yielding medicinal waters are common in the S. part of Indiana. Epsom salts and saltpetre have been obtained from the earth of some of the caves.

Agriculture, etc.—Indiana takes a leading position both as a grain-producing and as a stock-raising state. The cereal crops, hay, live-stock, provisions, flour and meats, potatoes, tobacco, dairy products, fruit, timber and other forest products are the chief articles of export. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were: corn, 163,200,890 bushels; wheat, 6,411,702 bushels; oats, 44,866,035 bushels; barley, 185,533 bushels; rye, 485,722 bushels; potatoes, 9,060,529 bushels; and hay, 1,663,452 tons. Other products of large aggregate value are grass- and clover-seeds, linseed, maple sugar, sorghum syrup, pulse, sweet potatoes, honey, and wax. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 4,250,094 pounds.

Manufactures.—The leading manufacturing industry is that of meat-packing, the products of which in 1900 were valued at $43,862,273. The centres of this industry are Hammond, Indianapolis, and Fort Wayne. The flour- and grist-mill products were valued in 1900 at $30,150,766. The manufactures of iron, lumber, and cheese are all of importance. To these may be added those of glass, woollens, machinery, carriages and railway-cars, castings, furniture, starch, bricks, saddlery, cooperage, beer, malt, spirits, metallic wares, boots and shoes, clothing, and agricultural implements.

Railroads.—The railroad system extends to almost every part of the state, and has greatly limited the navigation of canals and rivers. In 1847 the Madison and Indianapolis R. was opened. In that year there were 42 miles of railroad in the state; in 1850, 228 miles; in 1860, 2163 miles; in 1870, 3177 miles; in 1880, 4373 miles; in 1890, 6106 miles; in 1900, 6597 miles.

Education, State Institutions.—The leading educational institutions are the State University, at Bloomington; Purdue University, at Lafayette, with schools of natural science, engineering, agriculture, etc.; De Pauw University, at Greencastle; Indianapolis University (including Butler College, at Irvington); University of Notre Dame du Lac, at Notre Dame; Manchester College, at North Manchester; Wabash College, at Crawfordsville; Vincennes University and Rose Polytechnic Institute, at Terre Haute. There are state normal schools at Indianapolis and Terre Haute, a normal college at Covington, and private normal schools at Angola, Valparaiso, Rochester, and Muncie; and several schools of law, medicine, and theology. The state has hospitals for the insane at Logansport, Richmond, Evansville, and Indianapolis; a state soldiers' home at Lafayette; soldiers' orphans' home at Knightstown; a school for deaf, dumb, and blind at Indianapolis; a state reformatory at Jeffersonville; a state prison at Michigan City, etc.

Counties.—There were 92 counties in 1900: Adams, Allen, Bartholomew, Benton, Blackford, Boone, Brown, Carroll, Cass, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Crawford, Davies, Dearborn, Decatur, Dekalb, Delaware, Dubois, Elkhart, Fayette, Floyd, Fountain, Franklin, Fulton, Gibson, Grant, Greene, Hamilton, Hancock, Harrison, Hendricks, Henry, Howard, Huntington, Jackson, Jasper, Jay, Jefferson, Jennings, Johnson, Knox, Kosciusko, Lagrange, Lake, LaPorte, Lawrence, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Martin, Miami, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Newton, Noble, Ohio, Orange, Owen, Parke, Perry, Pike, Porter, Posey, Pulaaki, Putnam, Randolph, Ripley, Rush, Scott, Shelby, Spencer, Starke, Steuben, St. Joseph, Sullivan, Switzerland, Tippecanoe, Tipton, Union, Vanderburg, Vermilion, Vigo, Wabash, Warren, Warrick, Washington, Wayne, Wells, White, and Whitley.

Cities.—The principal cities are Indianapolis, the capital (pop. in 1900, 169,184); Evansville, the commercial centre of the SW. (50,007); Fort Wayne, the emporium of the NE. (45,115); Terre Haute, on the Wabash River (36,673); South Bend, on the St. Joseph River (35,999); Muncie (20,942); New Albany (20,628); Anderson (20,178); Richmond (18,226).

Constitution, Laws, etc.—The first constitution of the state was framed in 1816; that now in force was adopted in 1851. The governor is chosen for a term of four years. Most of the other important executive officers are elected for two years. The legislature consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives; the members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The judiciary is elective. Thirteen representatives are sent by the state to the Congress of the United States.

History.—A French settlement grew up at Vincennes in the first half of the eighteenth century. In 1763 the country came under British sway. In 1787 the Northwest Territory was organized, which included all the United States territories N. of the Ohio River. Indiana Territory was organized in 1800; it included the present states of Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and part of Minnesota. Michigan Territory was set off in 1805. Illinois Territory was detached in 1809. Indiana was admitted into the Union as a state in 1816. Meanwhile the power of the Indians had been crushed by Harrison's victory over the Prophet, the brother of Tecumseh, at Tippecanoe (1811). After the war of 1812-15 with England there was a prodigious stream of immigration to this new and bountiful region. A period of great prosperity was interrupted by the financial panic of 1837, but after a few years normal conditions were restored, and the economic development of the state proceeded again with rapid strides. In the last quarter of the nineteenth century the manufacturing industries of Indiana rose to large dimensions.

Population.—The population in 1800 was 5641, of which 4875 were within the present state limits; in 1810, 24,520, chiefly in the present limits; in 1815, 60,074; in 1820, 147,178; in 1830, 343,031; in 1840, 695,866; in 1850, 988,416; in 1860, 1,350,428; in 1870, 1,680,637; in 1880, 1,978,301; in 1890, 2,192,404, and in 1900, 2,516,462. Of the total population in 1900, 146,205 were foreign-born.

Indiana, a county in the west-central part of Pennsylvania, has an area of 820 sq. m. It is bounded on the S. by the Conemaugh River, and is also drained by Mahoning, Black Lick, and Two Lick creeks. This county has mines of bituminous coal and iron-ore, also salt springs. Capital, Indiana. Pop. in 1890, 42,175; in 1900, 42,556.

Indiana, a banking post-borough, capital of Indiana co., Pa., on the Pennsylvania R., 40 miles WNW. of Altoona. It has a state normal school, a foundry, woollen-mills, brick-, tile-, and glass-works, etc., and is a shipping point for coal and farm-produce. Pop. in 1900, 4142.

Indiana Harbor, a banking village of Lake co., Ind., on the Baltimore and Ohio and other railroads. Pop. about 400. It has steel-mills.

Indianapolis, in-de-an-ap'o-lis, a city, the capital of Indiana and of Marion co., is on the West Fork of the White River, 109 miles NW. of Cincinnati, on the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, the Lake Erie and Western and several other railroads. Lat. 39° 40' N.; lon. 86° 8' W. The site is nearly level and covers a very extended area. The streets generally cross one another at right angles, and especially in the residence quarter present a fine appearance in their handsome houses and shaded lawns. The city contains a fine court-house, the state institution for the deaf, dumb, and blind, a hospital for the insane, a state library, a public library (with upward of 100,000 volumes), masonic hall, the Heron Art Museum and Art School, city hospital, the University of Indianapolis, medical colleges, and various collegiate institutions. The capitol building, measuring 492 feet in length, was erected at a cost of $2,000,000. Other noteworthy buildings are the new post-office, city-hall, Commercial Club, the Propyleum (used for literary purposes), national arsenal, the chamber of commerce, and an academy of music. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, by Bruno Schmidt, of Berlin, having a shaft 235 feet in height, stands in Monument Place. Indianapolis is noted for the beauty of its parks (Riverside, Garfield, St. Clair, Brookside, etc.), which together cover an area of nearly 1300 acres. The railroads centring in it traverse localities unsurpassed in agricultural resources, and furnish the best facilities for bringing the country products to the city and for distributing the city manufactures through the country. The region is rich in mineral resources, and Indianapolis derives great advantages from the proximity of large natural gas- and oil-fields. The city's industries are represented by about 1100 manufactories employing more than 25,000 people, with an annual output of $70,000,000 worth of products. Among the leading industrial establishments are agricultural-implement factories, architectural-iron works, belting-factories, car-works, carriage- and wagon-factories, canned-goods factories, chemical-works, electric-light machinery factories, numerous foundries, engine- and boiler-works, fertilizer-factories, milling machinery works, railroad-frog and switch-works, furniture-factories, malleable-iron works, medicinal laboratories, pork-packing establishments, stove-foundries, starch-works, stave- and heading-factories, breweries, woollen-mills, etc. Other manufactures are those of terra-cotta, glass, pianos and organs, sewing-machines, and cotton goods. The receiving-yards for live-stock cover upward of 100 acres and the stock-sheds have a capacity for 4000 cattle and 35,000 swine. The grain-elevators have a capacity for 1,000,000 bushels. Owing to its central location and railroad facilities, Indianapolis is a favorite meeting-place for organized bodies and is widely known as the "Convention City." The place became the capital of the state in 1825. Pop. in 1850, 8090; in 1860, 18,611; in 1870, 43,244; in 1880, 75,056; in 1890, 105,436; in 1900, 169,184. Elevation above the sea, 700 feet.

Indianapolis, a post-village of Mahaska co., Iowa, about 28 miles N. of Ottumwa. Pop. 150.

Indian Archipelago. See MALAY ARCHIPELAGO.

Indian Arm, a hamlet and harbor in the district of Bonavista, Newfoundland, 63 miles from Catalina.

Indian Bay, a post-village of Monroe co., Ark., near the White River. Pop. 75.

Indian Camp, a post-village of Guernsey co., Ohio, 24 miles NE. of Zanesville. Pop. 80.

Indiancamp, a post-hamlet of Upshur co., W. Va.

Indian Creek, a small stream of Yuba co., towards the N. part of California, falls into Dry Creek about 22 miles from its junction with the Yuba River.

Indian (or Big Indian) Creek, Ill., enters the Fox River about 8 miles NE. of Ottawa.

Indian Creek, Ill., enters the Illinois River in the W. part of Cass co.

Indian Creek, Ind., enters the Ohio River about 8 miles above Leavenworth.

Indian Creek, Ind., enters the East Fork of the White River in Martin co. about 3 miles E. of Doverhill.

Indian Creek, Morgan co., Ind., falls into the West Fork of the White River a few miles below Martinsville.

Indian Creek, Switzerland co., Ind., flows into the Ohio near Vevay.

Indian Creek, Tishomingo co., Miss., enters the Tennessee River near Eastport.

Indian Creek, Mo., enters the Maramee from the right, in Franklin co.

Indian Creek, Tenn., enters the Tennessee River in the N. part of Hardin co.

Indiancreek, a post-hamlet of Knox co., Ky.

Indiancreek, a post-hamlet of Monroe co., Mo., about 28 miles WSW. of Hannibal.

Indiancreek, a post-hamlet of Unicoi co., Tenn.

Indiancreek, a post-village of Brown co., Tex., 125 miles SW. of Fort Worth. Pop. 110.

Indiancreek a post-hamlet of Norfolk co., Va.

Indian Desert, a largely arid region of northwestern India, chiefly in Rajputana, which separates the valley of the Indus from the plateau of central India.

Indian Falls, a post-village of Genesee co., N.Y., on Tonawanda Creek, about 28 miles ENE. of Buffalo. Here is a cascade 30 feet high. Pop. about 250.

Indian Fields, a post-office of Clark co., Ky.

Indian Fields, a post-village of Albany co., N.Y., about 17 miles SSW. of Albany. Pop. about 300.

Indianguap, a post-village of Hamilton co., Tex., 15 miles (direct) W. of Hamilton. Pop. 75.

Indiangurove, a post-hamlet of Chariton co., Mo., 7 miles from Dalton.

Indianguich, a post-hamlet of Mariposa co., Cal., about 80 miles SE. of Stockton. Gold has been found here.

Indian Harbor, a small fishing-settlement of Newfoundland, 34 miles from Burgeo.

Indian Harbor, a village of Guysborough co., Nova Scotia, on the sea, 18 miles SE. of Sherbrooke.

Indian Harbor, a post-village of Halifax co., Nova Scotia, on St. Margaret's Bay, 20 miles W. of Halifax. Pop. about 500.

Indianhead, a post-hamlet of Fayette co., Pa., 12 miles ENE. of Conneville. Pop. 60.

Indian Head, a banking post-village of Assiniboia, Canada, on the Canadian Pacific R., 11 miles from Qu'Appelle. Pop. in 1901, 768.

Indian Islands, two small islands of Newfoundland, 14 miles from Fogo.

Indian Kentucky Creek, of Indiana, flows into the Ohio 8 miles above Madison.

Indian Lake, N.Y., is in the E. part of Hamilton co., and is about 7 miles long. Its surplus water flows through a short outlet into the Hudson River.

Indian Lake, a post-village and resort of Hamilton co., N.Y., in a township (town) of the same name and on the shore of Indian Lake, about 50 miles WNW. of Whitehall. The town includes Eckford and other lakes, and is a wild mountainous forest. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1219; of the village, about 300.

Indian Lorette, a post-village of Quebec co., Quebec, on the Quebec and Lake St. John R. The banking point is Quebec, 9 miles distant. It has manufactures of moccasins and Indian goods. Pop. about 1200.

Indian Mills, a post-village of Burlington co., N.J. Pop. 75.

Indian Mills, a post-hamlet of Summers co., W. Va.

Indianmound, a post-village of Stewart co., Tenn., 10 miles NW. of Cumberland City. Pop. 95.

Indianneck, a post-hamlet of King and Queen co., Va.

Indian Ocean (anc. Ma'ra Indicum or In'dicus Océanus), a vast sea, separated from the Pacific Ocean on the E. by the Malay Archipelago and Australia and from the Atlantic Ocean by Africa on the W., and enclosed by the countries of Asia on the N. It extends from about lat. 25° N. in the Arabian Sea to the Antarctic Circle. Its southern limit is differently stated by different geographers, some of whom consider it to be a line drawn from Bass Strait to the Cape of Good Hope, the body of water S. of that imaginary line being spoken of as the South Sea. The N. shores are rendered singularly irregular by the projection of three vast peninsulas, Arabia, India, and Indo-China, which are separated by the Arabian Sea and Bay of Bengal. It communicates with the China Sea and the various Moluccan waters by the Strait of Malacca, Sunda Strait, Strait of Flores, the Bali and Lombok Passages, and Timor Sea. Two great nearly land-locked seas project northward from the NW. portion of the Indian Ocean,—the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, the connecting channels being the straits of Bab-el-Mandeb and Ormuz. The other principal arms are the Mozambique Channel, the gulfs of Cutch and Cambay, the Gulf of Mannar, Palk Strait, and Bass Strait. The most important islands are Madagascar, Mauritius, Réunion, the Comoro Islands, the Seychelles, Socotra, the Laccadives, Maldives, Chagos, Ceylon, and the Andaman and Nicobar groups. The main affluents are: in Asia, the Salwin, Irrawadi, Brahmaputra, Ganges, Godavery, Kistna, Nerubudda, Indus, and the Shat-el-Arab, formed by the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates; and in Africa, the Zambesi. The monsoons, or periodical winds, prevail in the N. part, blowing from the SW. between April (or March) and October and from the SE. during the rest of the year. Tempests are general at the periods of change; and between lat. 5° and 40° S. violent hurricanes frequently occur.

In the S. part of the Indian Ocean the equatorial current, connecting the Pacific and Atlantic, flows from E. to W. with velocities varying from 20 to 60 miles per day, and is deflected southward along the coast of Madagascar, to be again turned east. A SW. current also flows along the African coast through the Mozambique Channel and is known as the Mozambique Current. The Antarctic Drift enters into the more southerly portion of this basin, having an E. and (along the Western Australian coast) a northerly trend. The average depth of the ocean is assumed to be about 11,000 feet. A depth of 21,000 feet has recently been measured about lat. 18° S. and lon. 102° E. The maximum heat of the water occurs seemingly in the Arabian Sea, where it reaches 87.5° F.

Indiano'la, a post-hamlet of Brevard co., Fla.

Indianola, or Chil'licoth'e, a banking post-village of Vermilion co., Ill., on the Little Vermilion River, 18 miles by rail SSW. of Danville. Pop. in 1900, 381.

Indianola, a banking post-village of the Choctaw Nation, I.T. Pop. 125.

Indianola, a banking city, capital of Warren co., Iowa, 1 mile N. of the South River and 21 miles S. of Des Moines, on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R. and the Burlington Route. It has various manufactures and is the seat of Simpson College (Methodist), organized in 1867. Pop. in 1900, 3261.

Indianola, a banking post-town of Mississippi, the capital of Sunflower co., on the Southern R., 25 miles E. of Greenville. Pop. in 1900, 630.

Indianola, a banking city of Red Willow co., Neb., is on the Republican River, 22 miles E. of Culbertson, and on the Burlington Route. Pop. in 1900, 626.

Indianola, a former post-village of Calhoun co., Tex., on the W. shore of Matagorda Bay, was destroyed by successive cyclones in 1885 and 1886. Its site is occupied by PORT LAVACA.

Indian Orchard, a post-village of Hampden co., Mass., on the Chicopee River and on the Boston and Albany R., 6 miles NE. of Springfield. It has manufactures of yarn, worsteds, carpets, valves, etc. Pop. about 3100.

Indian Pass, a defile or gorge in the Adirondack Mountains of New York, between Mount McIntyre and Wallace Mountain, and containing one of the head-streams of the Hudson River. It is distinguished for magnificent scenery, the great cliff of Wallace Mountain (3890 feet), itself 1300 feet in height, rising with stupendous effect.

Indian Point, a post-village of Lunenburg co., Nova Scotia, on the N. shore of Mahone Bay, 11 miles N. of Lunenburg.

Indianridge, a post-hamlet of Grainger co., Tenn.

Indian River, of Sussex co., Del., flows eastward into the Atlantic Ocean.

Indian River, a navigable tidal inlet of Florida, on the E. side of the peninsula, flows nearly parallel with the coast in Brevard and Volusia cos. Length, about 100 miles. The breadth is very unequal; in some parts it expands into extensive lakes or lagoons. It communicates by canal with the Halifax River and by Indian River Inlet with the sea, and is continuous southward with St. Lucie Sound. Rookledge, Georgiana, and St. Lucie, winter-resorts, are situated on its banks, which are largely clothed with tropical or subtropical vegetation.

Indian River, N.Y., rises in Lewis co. and enters Black Lake in St. Lawrence co.

Indian River, of the Yukon district of Canada, flows into the Yukon River about 20 miles SW. of Dawson. Its chief tributaries are Quartz, Sulphur and Dominion creeks.

Indian River, a hundred of Sussex co., Del. Pop. in 1900, 2090. It contains Rehoboth Bay and is bounded S. by the Indian River.

Indian River, a post-hamlet of Washington co., Me., on an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean, about 15 miles SW. of Machias.

Indian River, a post-village and summer-resort of Cheboygan co., Mich., on the Michigan Central R., 18 miles SSW. of Cheboygan. Pop. 300.

Indian River, a post-hamlet of Lewis co., N.Y., on the Indian River, 30 miles E. of Watertown.

Indian River, a post-village of Peterborough co., Ontario, 9 miles E. by N. of Peterborough. Pop. about 150.

Indian River, a post-village of Prince co., Prince Edward Island, 10 miles from Summerside.

Indianrock, a post-hamlet of Franklin co., Me.

Indianrock, a post-hamlet of Botetourt co., Va., on the James River, 200 miles above Richmond and 7 miles from the Natural Bridge.

Indianrun, a post-village of Mercer co., Pa., about 14 miles SE. of Sharon. Pop. 75.

Indian Springs, a post-village of Butts co., Ga., about 50 miles SSE. of Atlanta. It has saline sulphur springs. Pop. about 300. It is on the Flovilla and Indian Springs R.

Indian Springs, a post-village and watering-place of Martin co., Ind., 9 miles N. of Shoals. Here are chalybeate and sulphur springs. Pop. about 150.

Indian Springs, a post-hamlet of Washington co., Md., 87 miles W. of Baltimore.

Indian Springs, a post-town of McDonald co., Mo. Pop. in 1900, 55.

Indian Stream, N.H., is one of the head-streams of the Connecticut River. It rises in the N. part of Coos co. and runs in a SSW. direction until it unites with the East Branch.

Indian Territory, a territorial region of the United States, primarily set apart by the general government as an abode for tribal Indians, is bounded N. by Kansas, E. by Missouri and Arkansas, S. by Texas, and W. by Oklahoma. Area, 31,400 sq. m., of which 400 sq. m. belong to water-surfaces.

Face of the Country.—The general slope of the land is towards the SE. to the lower valley of the Red River. Between the Red and Canadian rivers are several groups of hills, such as the Shawnee and the Sans Bois, which are continuations of the Ozark Mountains from Arkansas. Sugar Loaf Mountain has an elevation of 2600 feet. The rivers have broad and fertile bottom-lands which are separated from the rolling upland prairies by bluffs more or less abrupt. The valleys and southern prairies are especially rich and productive and well adapted for crops of cereals.

Rivers.—Indian Territory is well watered. The principal rivers are the Arkansas, which, with the Canadian River and other tributaries, drains the northern and middle portions, and the Red River, which, with numerous affluents, drains the southern section and forms the southern boundary.

Climate.—The climate is generally mild and healthful. The summers are hot, but there is an ample rainfall and not the liability to droughts which characterizes some of the neighboring sections.

Geology and Minerals.—Most of the territory is constructed of rocks of Carboniferous age, containing much good coal of a semi-bituminous character, which has been extensively mined. The product in 1899 was 1,537,427 (short) tons; in 1903, 3,517,388 tons. Iron, copper, lead, zinc, asphaltum, petroleum, natural gas, marble, and various building-stones are more or less abundantly found.

Vegetation and Animals.—There are extensive wooded districts in the northern portion of the territory. A belt of forest known as the "Cross-Timbers," from 5 to 60 miles wide, extends along the border of the Carboniferous formation in the western part of the territory. A large lumber-industry has also grown up in the southeast. The native wild animals have very generally disappeared, but some bears and other fur-bearing animals, wild turkeys, and several varieties of grouse are found. Many portions of the territory, especially the rocky regions in the Cherokee and Creek Nations, are well adapted for grazing.

Agriculture, Industries.—The territory, enjoying a rich and fertile soil, with a sufficiency of rain-fall, is well adapted to agricultural pursuits. In 1900 36.6 per cent. of the land was included in farms. The principal crops were corn, wheat, oats, and hay. Fruits and vegetables are largely grown, and much attention is paid to stock-raising. The number of cattle in 1900 exceeded 1,500,000. The most important industry is the milling of flour and corn, with a product, in 1900, valued at $1,198,472. Cotton-ginning and the making of cotton-seed oil and cake constitute the second industry; the combined products were valued, in 1900, at $797,407.

Education, Transportation.—The more civilized tribes have their own school laws, and considerable advance has been made in education. There are a large number of day-schools, and several boarding, industrial and manual-labor schools. Collegiate or academic institutions are found at Bacone (Indian University), Muskogee (Spalding Institute, Henry Kendall College), Tahlequah (Cherokee National Seminary), Vinita, Wagoner, and Ryan. The school population in 1899 was about 60,000, of whom about four-fifths were whites. Most of the Indians preserve the use of their old languages. There were in 1900 about 1500 miles of railway in operation.

Nations.—Indian Territory has 5 "nations" (Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole) and 7 reservations (Modoc, Ottawa, Peoria, Quapaw, Seneca, Shawnee, and Wyandotte). The Cherokee and Creek nations comprise most of the northern half of the territory and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations most of the southern half. The Seminole Nation embraces a small district in the W.

History.—This region was purchased by the United States as part of the Louisiana Territory from France in 1803, was selected in 1832 as the abode of the southern Indians E. of the Mississippi River, who were to be removed by the United States government from their ancient hunting-grounds, and set apart for that purpose by Congress in 1834. Besides its present limits, the territory thus set apart included the greater part of what is now the territory of Oklahoma, and also portions of Kansas and Nebraska. Between the years 1833 and 1838 the Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, and Chickasaws were removed hither, and they were followed by the Seminoles in 1846. Together they constitute what are now known as the "five civilized tribes." The government covenanted to maintain the exclusive title of the land to the Indians and to protect them from the westward tide of white civilization. In 1850 the area of this grant was stated to be over 195,000 sq. m., but by subsequent treaties the Indians ceded back to the United States the region lying N. of the 37th parallel. In 1866 the western portion of their domain was ceded to the government in consideration of the payment of a fixed valuation for the land thus released. The treaty stipulated that these lands were to be used by the government for the settlement of other Indian tribes or freedmen, but was not to be open to white settlers. This region was known as the Oklahoma district, and the Sacs, Foxes, and Pottawatomies were settled here in 1867, the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in 1869, the Iowas and Kickapoes in 1883, and at various other times, both on this land and among the civilized tribes themselves, reservations were established for remnants and parts of other tribes. By further payment to the Creeks and Seminoles in 1889, and to the Cherokees in 1893, the government obtained a removal of the clause in the treaties prohibiting white immigration, and was thus enabled to throw open and organize Oklahoma Territory. Under the treaties the Indians were looked upon as wards of the United States government. The lands allotted to each tribe were held in common, and each nation regulated its internal affairs according to its own code of primitive laws. Forms of government were organized similar to those of the states of the Union. The civilized tribes were slave-holders, and during the war of 1861-65 took sides with the Southern Confederacy, and for a time were considered to have forfeited their lands. By the treaties of 1866 amnesty was granted, and the liberated slaves were given certain landed rights. Among the Creeks and Seminoles the amalgamation with the African race has been so great that the characteristics of the latter are predominant. Intermarrying of the white and Indian races has been encouraged by the five nations, and in this way the white man readily acquired citizenship. But few full-blooded Indians are found to-day. While the few Indians of pure blood still technically act as legislators, the whites who have become citizens or their half-breed descendants really control "the affairs of the nations" and receive the benefit of the revenues. The Federal courts have now jurisdiction in the Indian Territory. The United States government in recent years has been directing its efforts to secure a change in the tenure of land so that it shall be held in severalty, a modus which would admit of the Indians becoming citizens of the United States.

Population and Towns.—The total population, according to the census of 1890, was 186,490, made up as follows: Indians of the 5 civilized tribes, 52,065; Indians of other tribes, 8708; colored citizens and claimants, 14,224; colored persons not citizens, 3500; whites, 107,987; Chinese, 6. The population was in 1900, 391,960; in June, 1901, 413,000, of whom about 300,000 were whites and 16,000 negroes. The principal towns are Ardmore (in the Chickasaw Nation), 5681; Muskogee, 4254; South McAlester, 3479; Chickasha, 3209; Durant, Coalgate, Vinita, Wagoner, Purcell, Hartshorne, and Tahlequah (the territorial capital).

Indiantown, a township (town) of Washington co., Me., bounded S. by Big Lake. Pop. in 1900, 87.

Indiantown, St. John co., New Brunswick, a suburb of St. John.

Indian Trail, a post-village of Union co., N.C., 22 miles SE. of Charlotte. Pop. 75.

Indian Valley, a post-hamlet of Washington co., Idaho.

Indian Valley, a post-hamlet of Floyd co., Va.

Indian Village, a post-village of Ouachita parish, La., 17 miles W. of Monroe. Pop. 75.

Indian Wheeling Creek, of Ohio, enters the Ohio opposite Wheeling.

Indies, East. See EAST INDIES, and INDIA.

Indies, West. See WEST INDIES.

Indigirka, in'de-ghin'ka, or Zapadnaya-Kolima, sa-pád'ni'-á-ko-lee'má, a river of eastern Siberia, territory of Yakutsk, rises in the Stanovoi mountains, and, after a N. course estimated at 700 miles, enters the Arctic Ocean in lat. 71° 34' N., lon. 160° E., by an estuary containing numerous islands. It receives many affluents, but the region it traverses is almost wholly a frozen desert with a few villages.

Indigo, a post-town of Victoria, Australia, 175 miles NE. of Melbourne. Pop. about 1500. It is in a mining district.

Indio, een'de-o, a river of the Isthmus of Panama, in the republic of Panama, unites with the Pacora to form a considerable stream, which enters the Pacific E. of Panama.

Indio, a post-village of Riverside co., Cal., on the Southern Pacific R. The banking point is Colton. Pop. about 175.

Indo-China, also called Farther India and China-India, the southeastern peninsula of Asia, comprising Tongking, Annam, French Cochinchina, Cambodia, Laos, Siam, the Shan country, Burma, and Malacca. The region differs entirely in character from India proper, in great part consisting of forest-clad mountain-ridges separated by narrow valleys. The people are almost entirely of the Mongolian stock, and employ languages of monosyllabic character, more or less closely allied to the Chinese, except in the Malay sub-peninsula, where the Malay race and language predominate. The prevailing religion is Buddhism. See the different countries enumerated.

Indo-China, French, a name under which the French dependencies of Cochinchina, Tongking, Annam, Cambodia, and Laos have been to an extent incorporated. Annam, Tongking, and Cambodia were united into a customs union in 1887. A portion of Siam E. of the Mekong River was annexed by France in 1893-96, and in 1900 the territory of Kwangchi-wan, on the coast of China, was placed under the authority of the governor-general of Indo-China. The seat of the governor-general is at Ha-noi. See the various countries enumerated.

Indore, in'dór', a native state of Central India, often called Holkar's Dominions, from its ruler, a Maharaja chief, who is called the Maharajah Holkar. The country is an aggregate of several isolated tracts, of which the southernmost are traversed by the Nerbudda River and the Vindhya Mountains, and the more northern are mostly parts of a fertile table-land. Capital, Indore. Among the chief products are wheat and other cereals, opium, cotton, and sugar-cane.

Indore, a town of British India, the capital of Indore, is situated on a wooded table-land, elevation nearly 2000 feet, on a railway, 33 miles S. of Ujjain. The massive granite palace of Holkar is its only edifice of importance. Pop. in 1901, 86,200.

Indragiri, in-drá-gh'e-ree, or Andragery, in-drá-ghá'ree, a navigable river of Sumatra, enters the ocean on its E. coast in lat. 0° 32' S.

Indragiri, or Andragery, a native state in the island of Sumatra, on the SE. coast, between the rivers Kampar and Jambi, which enter the sea respectively in lat. 0° 30' N. and 1° S. It is traversed by the river Indragiri, and is in general flat, especially towards the coast. Indragiri is governed by a sultan, but is under the supremacy of the Dutch.

Indramaya, een-drá-mí'oo, a cape, river, and town of Java: the town near the mouth of the river, which enters the sea on its N. coast, near the cape, 105 miles E. of Batavia.

Indrapura, in-drá-poo'rá, a town, river, state, and volcano (about 12,200 feet) of Sumatra: the town near the SW. coast, 150 miles NW. of Benkulen.

Indrapura Point, Sumatra, on the SW. coast, is in lat. 2° 5' S., and N. of it is a bay in which are the Indrapura Islands.

Indre, ánd'r, a river of France, departments of Indre and Indre-et-Loire, joins the Loire 18 miles WSW. of Tours, after a NW. course of 115 miles. It is navigable from Loches to the Loire, 45 miles.

Indre, a central department of France, formed of part of the old province of Berry. Area, 2624 sq. m. The surface is uniformly level. The principal rivers are the Indre and Creuse. The department produces grain, wine, fruits, etc., and its chestnuts are noted. It furnishes the best lithographic stones in France. Capital, Châteauroux. Pop. in 1891, 292,868; in 1901, 334,073.

Indre, a village of France, in Loire-Inférieure, 54 miles from Nantes.

Indre-et-Loire, ánd'r á lwan, a department in the NW. of France, formed chiefly of the old province of Touraine, comprising a region on both sides of the Loire. Area, 2360 sq. m. The surface is level. The soil near the Loire is very fertile, but there are large stretches of poor land, especially in the south. The Cher, Indre, and Vienne rivers water its S. portion. Among the chief products are grain, wine, hemp, fruit, and sugar-beets. The culture of silk is important, as are the silk, woollen, and leather manufactures of Tours. Capital, Tours. Pop. in 1891, 337,298; in 1901, 334,073.

Indret, ánd'rá, a small island of France, department of Loire-Inférieure, formed by the Loire, 5 miles W. of Nantes, with machine-shops and other works belonging to the French naval establishment.

Induno, in-doo'no, a village of Italy, province of Como, near Varese.

Indus (Sanskrit, Sindhu), a great river of Asia, rises in Tibet, on the N. side of the Kailas (Himalayas), in lat. 31° 20' N., lon. 82° E., near the sources of the Sutlej and Brahmaputra (Sanpo) and about 65 miles from the extreme headwaters of the Ganges. The stream flows NW. through Ladak nearly to Gilgit (lat. 36° N.), and is then deflected sharply SW., maintaining this general course in its traverse of the Himalaya mountains and beyond (across the Punjab, Sindh, etc.) to the sea. The total course of the river is estimated at 1800 miles and the drainage basin at 375,000 sq. m. The only important tributary of the Indus in its upper course is the Shaiyok, which joins it on the right in Bultistan, a short distance above Iskardo. South of the mountains it receives the Kabul, and, in lat. 28° 55' N., lon. 70° 28' E., 470 miles from the ocean, it is joined from the NE. by the Punjab, or "five rivers," which brings to it the united streams of the Punjab,—the Sutlej (anc. Hesusdrus), the Beas (anc. Hyphasis), the Chenab (anc. Acesines), the Ravi (anc. Hydrotos), and the Jhelum (anc. Hydaspes). Below this it has no tributary of much size, but repeatedly subdivides, giving off lateral streams, the principal being the Fulaali and Narra branches; and in about lat. 25° 9' N. the delta commences, the chief arms of which are the Buggaur, Sata, and Pinyari. The Indus enters the sea by a great number of mouths, among which, the Kori, properly an arm of the sea, is 7 miles wide and 20 feet deep. The present chief arm is the Hajamro. The delta extends from the ocean to a short distance beyond Hyderabad, and from Kurrachi to Luckput, being about 120 miles in extreme length and breadth. The only important town on the Indus is Hyderabad. The river has a total fall of about 18,000 feet; its bed at Leh is 11,000 ft. above the sea, and at Attock, about 900 miles from its mouth, it is 1000 ft., and is 800 ft. across and 60 ft. in depth. At this point it has a current of 6 miles an hour. Below this point it runs with great velocity, mostly between high cliffs (in one place 700 ft. in elevation), as far as Chaulabagh, after which its course is through a level country, with a breadth usually varying from one-fourth of a mile to upward of 1 mile, and an average velocity of from 2 to 3 miles an hour. During the season when it is lowest, tides are perceptible upward to about 25 miles below Tatta, or 75 miles from the ocean. The mean annual discharge of water is estimated to be 150,000,000,000 tons, a large proportion of its waters being consumed in irrigation and evaporation. The Indus is navigable from the sea as high as the influx of the Kabul River, near Attock, about 900 miles, and its tributaries are mostly navigable to the foot of the mountains; but the channel is so encumbered by shifting banks as to be adapted only for steamers and vessels of comparatively small draught. The gaviol, or long-nouted crocodile, is numerous in the river, and the alligator is found in its lagoons. The boia, a cetacean, is also abundant. Fish, especially the pulla, a species of carp, are very abundant and form a chief article of food for the natives. The country immediately adjacent to the banks of the Indus, in its delta especially, is of high fertility, but on either side this region is flanked by a bare desert.

Industry, a banking post-village of McDonough co., Ill., 53 miles NE. of Quincy. Pop. in 1900, 463.

Industry, a post-village of Clay co., Kan. Pop. 115.

Industry, a post-village of Beaver co., Pa., on the N. bank of the Ohio River, 34 miles WNW. of Pittsburg, and on the Pennsylvania Co's R. Pop. of Industry township in 1900, 664.

Industry, a post-village of Austin co., Tex., 70 miles WNW. of Houston. Pop. about 300.

Indwe, a settlement of Cape Colony, with important coal-mines of the Stormberg region, 25 miles from Dordrecht. Pop. about 800 whites.

Ineboli, ee-néb'ó-lee, a seaport of Asia Minor, on the Black Sea, in the vilayet of Kastamuni, 72 miles WSW. of Sinope. It has a fair roadstead and exports much wool, mohair, etc. Pop. about 8000 (?).

Inez, a post-village of Martin co., Ky. The banking point is Louisa. Pop. about 175.

Inez, a post-village of Victoria co., Tex., on the New York, Texas and Mexico R. The banking point is Victoria. Pop. 100.

Inficionado, een-fe-se-o-ná'do, a town of Brasil, in Minas Geraes, 12 miles N. of Mariana.

Ingaliuk (in-gá'le-ook), Ingaliuk, or Krusenstern (kroo'sen-stern) Island, one of the Diomed Islands, in Bering Strait. It belongs to the United States.

Ingalls, ing'gáls, a post-town of Madison co., Ind., on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis R., 23 miles E. of Indianapolis. Pop. in 1900, 542.

Ingalls, a post-village of Gray co., Kan. The banking point is Cimarron. Pop. 90.

Ingalls, a post-village of Menominee co., Mich., 18½ miles by rail N. of Menominee. Pop. about 250.

Ingalls, a post-village of Payne co., Okla. The banking point is Stillwater. Pop. 150.

Ingalls Crossing, a post-village of Oswego co., N.Y., 16 miles by rail SE. of Oswego. Pop. 130.

Ingallston, ing'gáls-ton, a post-township of Menominee co., Mich. Pop. in 1900, 769.

Ingallton, a post-village of Dupage co., Ill., on the Chicago Great Western and the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Rs. The banking point is Wheaton. Pop. about 100.

Ingelfingen, ing'el-fing'en, a town of Württemberg, on the Kochoer, 43 miles NNE. of Stuttgart. It has two castles. Pop. about 1300.

Ingelheim, Nieder, and Ober, two contiguous towns of Hesse. See NIEDERRINGELHEIM and OBERRINGELHEIM.

Ingelmunster, ing'wel-mun'ter, a town of Belgium, in West Flanders, 7½ miles N. of Courtrai. It has manufactures of textiles and large carpet-mills. Pop. in 1900, 6429.

Ingembohl, ing'en-böl', a village of Switzerland, canton of 2 miles SW. of Schwyz.

Ingenio, een-ná'ne-o, a town of the Canary Islands, on the E. side of the island of Gran Canaria.

Ingermanland. See INGRIA.

Ingersheim, ing'ers-híme', a village of Alsace, 3 miles NW. of Colmar. Pop. in 1900, 2663.

Ingersoll, a post-hamlet of Clinton co., Mich., 8 miles WNW. of Lansing.

Ingersoll, a banking village of Woods co., Okla. Pop. 150.

Ingersoll, a banking town of Oxford co., Ontario, on the river Thames and on the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Rs., 19 miles NNE. of London. It has saw- and grist-mills and manufactures of furniture, pianos, agricultural implements, carriages, bolts, etc. Pop. in 1901, 4573.

Ingham, ing'am, a county in the S. part of Michigan, has an area of 547 sq. m. It is intersected by the Grand River and is partly drained by Red Cedar Creek. Capital, Mason. Pop. in 1890, 37,666; in 1900, 39,818.

Iosco, a post-village of Livingston co., Mich., 33 miles SE. of Lansing. Pop. about 100.

Iota, a post-village of Acadia parish, La., on the Louisiana Western R. The banking point is Crowley. Pop. about 350.

Iowa, i-o'-wa (named from the Iowa Indians, a tribe of Dakota stock), a river of the state of Iowa, rises in Hancock co., has a generally SE. course, and enters the Mississippi River, in Louisa co., about 20 miles S. of Muscatine. It is about 350 miles long, and is navigable to Iowa City.

Iowa, a north-central state of the American Union, situated in the Mississippi Valley, and bounded N. by Minnesota, E. by Wisconsin and Illinois, S. by Missouri, and W. by Nebraska and South Dakota. Its northern limit is the parallel of 43° 30' N. lat. The Mississippi River washes its E. border. On the S. is the parallel of 40° 36' N., but the Des Moines River, for a little distance, is its southern boundary. The Big Sioux and Missouri rivers, on the W., respectively separate it from South Dakota and Nebraska. Area of the land-surface, 55,475 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 550 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—Iowa is for the most part what is called rolling prairie,—that is, a country with no marked hills, but with long wave-like elevations of gentle slope. Some of the rivers have bold, bluff, and rocky banks; and in some regions near the larger streams the soil and underlying drift and loess have been deeply eroded by torrents, giving to the country a broken character. This is especially true of some portions of the Missouri Valley. The highest elevation in the state, at Pringhar, in O'Brien co., is 1800 feet; the lowest point, the low-water surface of the Mississippi at the SE. angle of the state, is 450 feet.

The rivers are all direct or indirect tributaries of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. Among them are the Upper Iowa, Turkey, Maquoketa, Wapsipinicon, Cedar, Iowa, Skunk (or Checaqua), Des Moines, Chariton, Crooked, Nishnabotona, Boyer, Soldier, Maple, Little Sioux, Floyd, and Rock rivers. A few of these have had a limited importance as navigable streams; many of them afford water-power at their falls. The principal lakes are in the N., and they are all small. Spirit Lake, Lake Okoboji, Clear, Swan, High, Palo Alto, Butler, and Storm lakes are beautiful sheets of water; and the Walled Lakes, of which there are a number, present the singular phenomenon of a natural wall of loose stones surrounding their waters.

Geology and Minerals.—The formations of the state belong almost entirely to the Paleozoic series, but are, as a rule, overlaid by a drift of considerable depth. In point of economic value the most important geological strata are the coal-measures. The lower coal-measures are the most important, and cover an area of about 6000 sq. m. Towards the SW. occur the middle coal-measures; the upper Carboniferous formation extends into the neighboring states of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska. The coals of Iowa are bituminous, and as compared with the coals of the Allegheny field they are mostly inferior in quality, but they are nevertheless of the highest importance to the industrial development of a state no more abundantly supplied with timber and wood than Iowa is. The coal product was, in 1900, 5,202,939 short tons, valued at $7,155,341; that of 1903 was 6,419,811 short tons, valued at $10,563,910. Lead is found mainly in the galena limestone, and Dubuque has a large annual product of this commodity. Lime, gypsum, sandstone, limestone, and other building-stones, brick-materials, and fertile clays are abundant.

Vegetation.—Less than one-eighth of the state is covered by natural forests, mostly of hard-wood and other deciduous trees,—such as the oak, walnut, hickory, elm, maple, cottonwood, etc. The native or wild grasses serve well as pasture and afford a large supply of cheap hay. The wild rice of the N., of which the seed was formerly eaten by the Indians, affords a useful paper-stock. The native tanning plant (a Polygonum) is collected and employed in tanning leather, for which use it is well adapted.

Agricultural Resources, Climate, etc.—There is very little absolutely waste land in the state. The prairies are everywhere covered with a deep friable loam, with few stones and stumps, and with but little marsh- or slough-land. The bluff-country of the W. has a very deep soil of good character, always free from surplus moisture. The climate is generally very healthful, although showing extremes of winter cold and summer heat (—40° and 105°–110°). The average annual rainfall is about 30 inches, well distributed in quantity for the purposes of agriculture. In 1900 Iowa took first rank in the states of the Union in the value of its farm-products and likewise in the cultivation of fruits. Corn, oats, wheat, barley, and other cereals, potatoes, hay, dairy products, wool, linseed, sorghum are produced very largely. The southern portion is generally well adapted to vine-growing. The leading crops in 1900 were: corn, 385,859,948 bushels; wheat, 21,798,225 bushels; oats, 134,572,138 bushels; barley, 11,708,822 bushels; rye, 1,806,570 bushels; buckwheat, 148,800 bushels; potatoes, 14,604,576 bushels; and hay, 5,006,470 tons. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 3,813,186 pounds. Iowa stands next to Texas in the value and extent of its live-stock interests.

Manufactures.—The leading industry is that of meat-packing, the products of which, in 1900, were valued at $25,695,044. Following this is the making of butter, cheese, and condensed milk, which yielded a product valued at $15,846,077. Other important articles of manufacture are flour, lumber, furniture, carriages, woollens, cooperage, saddlery, agricultural and other machinery, bricks, pottery, leather, leather goods, pig-lead, metallic wares, brewed and distilled liquors, linseed oil, lime, etc.

The Counties, 99 in number, are Adair, Adams, Allamakee, Appanoose, Audubon, Benton, Blackhawk, Boone, Bremer, Buchanan, Buena Vista, Butler, Calhoun, Carroll, Cass, Cedar, Cerro Gordo, Cherokee, Chickasaw, Clarke, Clay, Clayton, Clinton, Crawford, Dallas, Davis, Decatur, Delaware, Des Moines, Dickinson, Dubuque, Emmett, Fayette, Floyd, Franklin, Fremont, Greene, Grundy, Guthrie, Hamilton, Hancock, Hardin, Harrison, Henry, Howard, Humboldt, Ida, Iowa, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Johnson, Jones, Keokuk, Kossuth, Lee, Linn, Louisa, Lucas, Lyon, Madison, Mahaska, Marion, Marshall, Mills, Mitchell, Monona, Monroe, Montgomery, Muscatine, O'Brien, Osceola, Page, Palo Alto, Plymouth, Pocahontas, Polk, Pottawattamie, Poweshiek, Ringgold, Sac, Scott, Shelby, Sioux, Story, Tama, Taylor, Union, Van Buren, Wapello, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Winnebago, Winneshiek, Woodbury, Worth, and Wright.

Cities.—The largest are Des Moines, the capital (pop. in 1900, 62,139); Dubuque, on the Mississippi (pop. 34,297); Davenport, on the Mississippi, opposite Rock Island, Ill. (35,254); Sioux City (33,111); Council Bluffs (25,802);

Cedar Rapids (25,656); Burlington, a manufacturing and business centre on the Mississippi (23,201); Clinton (22,698); Ottumwa (18,197); Keokuk, on the Mississippi, at the SE. angle of the state (14,641); Muscatine; Waterloo.

Railroads.—Iowa has greatly extended its railroad system, so that nearly all the counties are traversed by lines which extend directly or indirectly to every important point within the state. In 1855 there were 68 miles of railroad; in 1860, 655; in 1870, 2095; in 1890, 8416; in 1900, 9405.

Education.—The State University is at Iowa City and provides professional as well as academic instruction for both sexes. Other leading collegiate institutions are Drake University, at Des Moines; Grinnell College, at Davenport; Highland Park College, at Des Moines; Upper Iowa University, at Fayette; Iowa Wesleyan University, at Mount Pleasant; Central University of Iowa, at Pella; Humboldt College, at Humboldt; Iowa College, at Grinnell; Cornell College, at Mount Vernon; Burlington Institute, at Burlington; Mount St. Joseph's Academy, at Dubuque; and St. Francis Academy, at Council Bluffs. The Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts is located at Ames. Normal schools and colleges are at Cedar Falls, Bloomfield, Algona, Shenandoah, Humeston, and other towns. There is a state college for the blind at Vinton. The state institution for deaf-mutes is at Council Bluffs; the reform school for boys is at Eldora and that for girls at Salem. A school for feeble-minded children is established at Glenwood.

Constitution, History.—The governor and other chief executive officers are chosen for the term of two years. The legislature consists of a Senate, whose members are elected for 4 years, and of a House of Representatives, elected for 2 years. The state sends 11 members to the lower house of Congress.

Iowa was formerly the abode of portions of the Sac, Fox, and Iowa tribes of Indians. The region was claimed by the French and was a part of the Louisiana purchase of 1803. It belonged successively to Missouri, Michigan, and Wisconsin territories, and was organized as Iowa Territory in 1838. Iowa was admitted as a state into the Union in 1846. The French came to Dubuque in 1788 and wrought the lead-mines there; but the settlement was not permanent, and no town or settled white population existed here before 1832. The admission of Iowa into the Union was followed by unexampled and uninterrupted prosperity.

Population.—The population in 1838 was 22,859; in 1840, 43,112; in 1846, 97,588; in 1850, 192,214; in 1860, 674,913; in 1870, 1,194,020; in 1875, 1,350,544; in 1880, 1,624,615; in 1890, 1,911,896; in 1900, 2,231,853. The foreign-born population in 1900 was 305,920, composed mainly of Germans and Scandinavians.

Iowa, a county in the southeast-central part of Iowa, has an area of 576 sq. m. It is intersected by the Iowa River and the North Fork of the English River. Capital, Marengo. Pop. in 1890, 18,270; in 1900, 19,544.

Iowa, a county in the SW. part of Wisconsin, has an area of 763 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by the Wisconsin River and is partly drained by the head-streams of the Pecatonica River. Lead, copper, and zinc are found. Capital, Dodgeville. Pop. in 1890, 22,117; in 1900, 23,114.

Iowa Center, a post-village of Story co., Iowa, on Indian Creek, 27 miles NNE. of Des Moines.

Iowa City, a post-village of Placer co., Cal., about 48 miles E. of Marysville. The banking point is Auburn. Pop. about 500.

Iowa City, the capital of Johnson co., Iowa, and the capital of the state from 1839 to 1856, is pleasantly situated on the E. bank of the Iowa River, 54 miles W. by N. of Davenport, on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R. It is the seat of the Iowa State University, organized in 1860, which has departments in arts, science, law, medicine, dentistry, and pharmacy, and over 1500 students, about one-fourth of whom are women. The Iowa City Academy is also located here. Iowa City has important meat-packing and manufacturing industries, foundries and machine-shops. Pop. in 1900, 7987.

Iowa Falls, a banking post-town of Hardin co., Iowa, on the Iowa River and on the Illinois Central and other railroads, 50 miles E. of Fort Dodge. It has manufactures of gasoline-engines, store-fixtures, etc. Pop. in 1900, 2840.

Iowapark, a banking post-village of Wichita co., Tex., on the Fort Worth and Denver City R., 11 miles NW. of Wichita Falls. Pop. about 750.

Iowa Point, a post-village of Doniphan co., Kan., on the Missouri River, 31 miles N. of Atchison.

Iowaville, a post-hamlet of Sedgwick co., Kan.

Ipava, I-pah'və, a banking post-village of Fulton co., Ill., on the Burlington Route, 10 miles WSW. of Lewis town. Pop. in 1900, 749.

Ipek, a town of European Turkey. See PERCH.

Iphofen, ip'hof'en, a town of Bavaria, in Middle Franconia, 32 miles NNW. of Ansbach. Pop. about 1750.

Ipiates, ee-pe-á'lás, a town and customs station of the department of Cauca, in Colombia, 30 miles SSW. of Pasto, near the Ecuador frontier. Pop. about 14,000.

Ipoly, ee'pol' (Ger. Eipel, i'pel), a river of Hungary, joins the Danube, 10 miles below Gran, after a SSW. course of about 120 miles.

Ipolság, ee'pol'shág', a town of Hungary, co. of Hont, on the Ipoly. Pop. about 3250.

Ips, a town of Austria. See YASS.

Ipsala, ip'sá'lá, a town of European Turkey, in Rumelia, on the Maritza, at the influx of the river Ipsala.

Ipsambul, Nubia. See ABU-SIMBEL.

Ipsara, or Psara (anc. Pepra), an island belonging to Turkey, in the Aegean Sea, 9 miles NW. of Chios. Length and breadth, 5 miles each.

Ipsus (Gr. Ipsos), in ancient geography, a town of Phrygia, where in 301 or 300 a.c. the army of Antigonus and his son Demetrius Poliorcetes was overwhelmed by Seleucus and Lysimachus.

Ipswich, a parliamentary, municipal, and county borough of England, within the territorial limits of the co. of Suffolk, on the left bank of the Gipping, which here takes the name of Orwell, 66 miles NE. of London. Lat. of observatory, 52° 0' 33" N.; lon. 1° 13' 57" E. In the older portion of the town, near the river, the streets are narrow and irregular and, with their quaint decorated houses, present a picturesque appearance. The newer section of the city contains many handsome buildings. The most interesting edifices are the old Sparrow's House (1567), in which Charles II. is said to have hidden after the battle of Worcester, Neptune Inn (1639), the town-hall, in Italian Renaissance style, with a clock-tower, the post-office, the corn exchange, the museum, containing fine collections of Suffolk Crag fossils and British birds, and the church of St. Mary le Tower. The principal parks are Christchurch Park, with two arboreta, and the promenade on the river-side near the docks. The industries of Ipswich comprise the manufacture of agricultural implements, artificial manures, soap, and paper, and brewing and ship-building. Ipswich returns 2 members to parliament. Cardinal Wolsey was born here. Of the college founded by him in the town only the gateway now remains. Pop. in 1801, 11,366; in 1841, 25,264; in 1891, 57,360; in 1901, 66,630.

Ipswich, a banking post-village and township (town) of Essex co., Mass., on the Ipswich River, 3 miles from its entrance into the ocean and 27 miles NNE. of Boston, on the Boston and Maine R. The river, which here affords water-power, is crossed by several bridges. The town has manufactures of cottons and woollens, hosiery, heels, etc. Pop. in 1900, 4655.

Ipswich, a banking post-village, capital of Edmunds co., S. Dak., 26 miles W. of Aberdeen, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. Pop. in 1900, 397.

Ipswich, a town of Australia, in Queensland, 23 miles by rail W. of Brisbane. It is on the Bremer River. It has coal-mines. Pop. about 8000 (with suburbs, in 1901, 15,246).

Ipswich River, Mass., traverses Essex co. and enters the Atlantic Ocean 10 miles SSE. of Newburyport.

Iquique, ee-kee'ká, a seaport town of Chile, capital of the province of Tarapacá, on the Pacific Ocean, 40 miles W. of Tarapacá. It is opposite the island of Iquique (lat. 20° 12' S., lon. 70° 14' W.). Iquique exports much nitrate of soda (saltpetre), of which there are large deposits in the vicinity, and also iodine and ores of silver. The city is well built, of a modern aspect, and extensively connected by railroads with the interior. In 1868 and in 1877 it suffered greatly from earthquakes. Pop. in 1900, 42,440.

IQUITOS, ee-kee'toos, a town and river-port of Peru, in the department of Loreto, on the Upper Amazon, 60 miles above the mouth of the Napo. It has a large floating-dock, government iron-works, ship-yard, machine-shops, saw-mills, etc. It has an extensive trade in rubber, straw hats, etc. Pop. about 5000.

Ira, a post-village of Jasper co., Iowa, on the Chicago Great-Western R. The banking point is Colfax. Pop. 100.

Ira, a post-village of Cayuga co., N.Y., in Ira township (town), 22 miles N. of Auburn. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1668; of the village, about 150.

Ira, a township (town) of Rutland co., Vt., 7 miles SW. of Rutland. Pop. in 1900, 350; of the village, about 150.

Irak-Ajemi, ee'rák'áj'eh-mee', an extensive region in the west-central portion of Persia, corresponding approximately to the ancient Media. The surface is an elevated table-land, traversed by several mountain-ranges. Isfahan is the great emporium of trade.

Irak-Arabi, ee'rah' Ar'a-bee', a district in Asiatic Turkey, vilayet of Bagdad, mostly between the lower courses of the Euphrates and the Tigris, and including the city of Bagdad. It corresponds approximately to the ancient Babylonia.

Iran', the name applied to the great table-land between Turan (Turkestan) and the Arabian Sea, stretching from Mesopotamia to India. It includes Persia, Afghanistan, and Beluchistan. Iran is also the official name of Persia.

Iranghi, a region of German East Africa, NW. of the district of Mwapwa. It is bordered by the Iranghi mountains, about 7000 feet high.

Irapuato, ee-rá-pwá'to, a town of Mexico, state and 21 miles S. by W. of Guanajuato, on the railroad connecting the city of Mexico with Guadalajara. Pop. about 20,000.

Irasburg, i'raz-burg, a post-village of Orleans co., Vt., in Irasburg township (town), on the Black River, 40 miles NNE. of Montpelier. Pop. of the town in 1900, 939.

Irawadi, or Irrawaddy (originally Eriwadi,—i.e., the "great river"), one of the great rivers of southeastern Asia, rises by two branches on the southern face of the Nam-ku mountain, NE. of Assam, in about lat. 28° 30' N., lon. 98° E. It flows generally S., traversing Burma, and enters the Indian Ocean (Bay of Bengal), by numerous mouths, E. of Cape Negrais, in about lat. 16° N., lon. 95° E. Its length is estimated at 1200-1300 miles. Its principal affluents are the Khyendwin (Chindwin) and Bhamo rivers. In lat. 17° N. it separates into numerous arms, which cover an area of about 20,000 sq. m. with a network of ramifications. The Rangoon and Bassein branches form the E. and W. boundaries of this delta, a region covered with teak-forests and grass-jungles, interspersed with rice-grounds. The main stream, from the head of the delta to above Ava, varies from 1 to 4 miles in breadth, and is navigable for steamers of considerable size for 800 miles. Smaller craft are towed up to Bhamo, and there are considerable stretches available for navigation beyond. There are some rapids, which impede navigation, 20 miles above Bhamo, where the stream suddenly contracts from over a half-mile width to 500 feet. The mean discharge at the delta is about 500,000 cubic feet per second, which is quadrupled in periods of flood. The principal city on the river, not reckoning Rangoon (which is on the Rangoon branch, near its mouth), is Mandalay.

Irazú, e-rá-soo', a volcano of Costa Rica, near the city of Cartago. Elevation, about 11,200 feet.

Irbít, ir-bit', a town of Russia, government of Perm, 100 miles ENE. of Yekaterinburg, at the junction of the Irbít and Nitsa. It is noted for a large annual fair, which lasts through the month of February, and is attended by a great concourse of European and Asiatic merchants. It is connected by steamboat-lines with the principal towns of the Obi valley. Pop. in 1897, 20,064.

Irby, a post-village of Irwin co., Ga. The banking point is Tifton. Pop. 100.

Iredell, ir'del, a county in the NW. part of North Carolina, has an area of 592 sq. m. It is bounded on the SW. by the Catawba River and is drained by several small affluents of the Yadkin River. Capital, Statesville. Pop. in 1890, 25,462; in 1900, 29,064.

Iredell, a banking post-village of Bosque co., Tex., on the Texas Central R., 74 miles NW. of Waco. It is in a cotton region. Pop. about 570.

Ireg, ee'rég', a town of Hungary, co. of Tolna, 24 miles SSE. of Veszprim. Pop. about 3000.

Ireg, or Irig, a town of Hungary, in Slavonia, co. of Symria, 12 miles S. of Peterwardein. Pop. about 5000.

Ireland (Ere, Erin, á'rin, usually pronounced ee'rin; L. Hibernia, Gr. Írēnē, Iernē), the more western of the two principal islands of which the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland is composed, between lat. 51° 25' and 56° 23' N. and lon. 5° 20' and 10° 26' W. It has the Atlantic Ocean on all sides except the E., where it is separated from Great Britain by St. George's Channel, the Irish Sea, and the North Channel. Length, from Fair Head to Mizen Head, about 300 miles; greatest breadth, 170 miles. Area, including the adjacent islands, 32,605 sq. m. Pop. in 1841, 8,196,000; in 1851, 7,896,000; in 1861, 5,797,000; in 1871, 5,412,000; in 1881, 5,175,000; in 1891, 4,706,162; in 1901, 4,458,775. The extraordinary decrease is the result of emigration, which assumed immense proportions after the great famine of 1846-47, consequent upon the potato rot. The Irish and their descendants in the New World probably number about 10,000,000, the great bulk of whom are in the United States. A considerable fraction of the Canadian population is Irish. Australia has also had a large Irish immigration.

Ireland is divided into 4 provinces, 32 counties, and 2 independent cities (Dublin and Belfast), the populations

† Inclusive of Belfast city (349,180).

Religious denominations: Roman Catholics in 1891, 3,549,745; in 1901, 3,308,661; Protestant Episcopalians in 1891, 600,830; in 1902, 581,089; Presbyterians in 1891, 446,687; in 1901, 453,173; Methodists in 1901, 62,006; Jews in 1901, 3896. The chief cities are: Dublin, the capital, with a population in 1901 of 290,638 (with the suburbs, 373,179); Belfast, 349,180; Cork, 75,978; Londonderry, 39,873; Limerick, 38,085; and Waterford, 26,743.

Physical Aspect.—Ireland has a wavy continuous outline on the E. coast, but is indented by deep inlets and fjords on its other sides, with rock-bound coasts N. and W. The surface is mostly level. Most of its mountains, as the Wicklow, Mourne, Donegal, Mayo, Galway, and Kerry mountains, are in isolated groups towards the coasts and extremities of the island, surrounding a central plain comprising a large extent of bog-land and traversed by a few low hill-ranges. Carran-tual, in the McGillicuddy Reeks, Kerry, is the highest summit, rising to 3414 feet. Granite, flanked by Silurian strata, forms the Wicklow range of mountains on the E. coast. The same rocks prevail in the Mourne mountains, and an extensive trap formation in Antrim is succeeded by clay-slate on the W. Granite again appears in the Galway mountains, and the Old Red Sandstone extensively prevails in Munster. The axes of most of the mountains are directed NE.-SW., but in the extreme S., where the trends have been determined in post-Carboniferous times, their course is nearly E.-W. The great plain in the centre, 250 to 300 feet above the sea, is formed of Carboniferous limestone, and contains many bogs, lakes, and green meadows. In this limestone region are the coal-basins, the output from which, almost wholly of anthracite, is not very large. In 1901 the production was only 103,029 tons. Besides coal, Ireland possesses two other species of fuel, viz., lignite and turf (or peat). The former is found in dense strata encompassing the S. half of Lough Neagh; while the turf has been estimated to cover nearly one-seventh of the entire area. Copper and lead are now but little worked, and there are but few places where the mining of iron-ores is actively carried on. A small quantity of silver is found in the various lead-mines. Gold appears to have been at one time abundant, as is attested by the number of gold prehistoric ornaments, but the supply was apparently early exhausted. Ireland is rich in marbles (the black from Galway and Kilkenny, the red from Cork, and the green serpentinous from Connemara) and has also many varieties of fine building-sandstones. The total mineral product of 1901 was valued at £244,234.

The country is well watered. The principal rivers are the Shannon (with a length of about 200 miles), Lee, Barrow, Blackwater, Suir, Nore, Bann, Foyle, Boyne, Slaney, Liffey, Bandon, and Erne. Lakes—termed loughs—are very numerous, and the better known are Neagh, Erne, Allen, Corrib, Mask, Conn, Rea, and Derg, and the famed Lakes of Killarney. Loughs Strangford, Belfast, Foyle, and Swilly, on the N. and NE. coast, are inlets of the sea. Other principal inlets are Dundrum, Carlingford, Dundalk, and Dublin bays, and Wexford harbor, on the E.; Bantry, Dunmanus, Dingle, Tralee, Galway, Clew, Blacksod, Killybegs, Sligo, Donegal, and Guibarra bays, with the estuaries of the Shannon and Kenmare rivers, on the W.; and Waterford, Dungarvan, and Cork harbors, on the S. coast. Ireland is so much indented by the sea, that no locality is over 60 miles from its shores; and this, together with its exposure to the warm winds from the Atlantic Ocean, conduces to the general mildness and moisture of its climate. The mean annual temperature ranges from 48° in the N. to 52° in the S. At Dublin the average temperature of the coldest month is about 39°; of the warmest, about 60°. The annual rainfall is here 39 inches, but the quantity is nearly doubled at many points of the W. coast. Westerly winds prevail for nine months in the year. Plants that require artificial heat in England flourish here in the open air. The broad-leaved myrtle grows luxuriantly in some southern counties, and many plants (arbutus, menziesia, etc.) of southern Europe flourish; while Alpine plants of the extreme north of Europe are also found on some of the mountains. The generally green-covered surfaces, with their bright or luxuriant growths of grass, have suggested for the island the name of "Emerald Isle." The animal life is less abundant than in England or Scotland, and it lacks a number of the more prominent mammalian types that belong to those regions, as the roebuck, polecat, brown hare, and various weasels and field-mice. The wolf and (Irish) elk were formerly a part of the Irish fauna. No serpent of any kind is found in the island at this time.

Agriculture, Fisheries, Manufactures.—Farms are generally very small. The great bulk of the land was confiscated by the governments of James I., Cromwell, and William III., and bestowed on English proprietors, by whose descendants most of the Irish property is still possessed. Potatoes long formed the staple crop and food of the Irish peasantry, till the failure of the potato crop in 1845, 1846, and 1847, which led to a famine and to the emigration of many of the people. In 1902 the corn and green crops were grown on 2,376,847 acres. In 1901 the yield of wheat was 1,470,000 bushels; of barley and bere, 6,536,000 bushels; of oats, 51,069,000 bushels; of potatoes, 3,372,000 tons; and of turnips and swedes, 4,884,000 tons. Many vessels are employed in the fisheries around the coasts, where herrings, pilchards, cod, ling, and hake are among the more plentiful kinds taken, and in the estuaries, where salmon and eels are abundant. In 1900 the number of persons engaged in the fisheries was 28,315, while the catch of 1901 was valued at £284,735. The leading manufacturing industry of Ireland is the making of linen. The chief seat of this industry is Ulster, the city of Belfast being its great centre. There were, in 1896, 225 linen-manufactories, employing 72,785 hands. Other textiles are also produced, and the manufacture of paper is important. Brewing and the distilling of whiskey are extensively carried on. Dublin porter is famous. In the north of Ireland many persons are employed in embroidering on muslin. Belfast is the centre of this manufacture, as well as of an extensive ship-building industry. Principal exports are live-stock, linen, fish, whiskey, eggs, bacon, and salt beef. The exports go almost entirely to Great Britain.

Communication.—All the principal towns are connected with one another by rail, and there is an extensive system of canals, by which the E. is placed in water-communication with the W. and many of the lakes united with one another. There were, in 1902, 3208 miles of railroad in operation.

Education.—Among the higher educational institutions of Ireland are the University of Dublin, founded in 1591; the Royal University of Ireland, an examining body, founded in 1880; and the Catholic University (College) of Ireland, at Dublin. There are Queen's Colleges at Belfast, Cork, and Galway. Among the technical institutions the most noteworthy are the Royal College of Science, at Dublin, and the Metropolitan School of Art. The number of elementary schools in operation in 1901 was 8692, having an average attendance of 482,031.

Government, Churches.—Ireland has had no parliament of its own since 1800. It is represented in the British House of Lords by 28 temporal peers elected for life by the whole body of Irish peers. In the House of Commons it is represented by 103 members, 85 of whom are sent by the counties, 16 by the cities and boroughs, and 2 by the University of Dublin. The government is vested in the lord-lieutenant (viceroy), assisted by the secretary for Ireland and a privy council nominated by the crown. In 1869 an act was passed by which from Jan. 1, 1871, the Protestant church in Ireland was disendowed and ceased to be a state establishment, all religions being placed on the same footing. The Episcopal church comprises 2 archbishoprics (Armagh and Dublin) and 11 bishoprics; the Roman Catholic church has 4 archbishoprics (Armagh, Cashel, Dublin, and Tuam) and 23 bishoprics. The Presbyterian church, which in 1902 counted 569 congregations, has two colleges, one, purely theological, at Belfast, and the other (Magee College), with theological, literary, and scientific departments, at Londonderry. The Roman Catholics comprise about 70 per cent. of the whole population. Down to near the middle of the nineteenth century the Irish language was the speech of the great mass of the rural population. At present it is spoken by only about one-eighth of the inhabitants, while the number of persons who cannot speak English is only about one per cent. of the total population.

History.—The greater part of the Irish are descendants of the Celts who invaded the island in prehistoric times. Early in the fifth century Christianity was introduced by St. Patrick. For many centuries the country was the scene of perpetual warfare between the petty kings and their chiefs. The Normans who invaded England did not spare Ireland. In 1014 a stop was finally put to their inroads. The English conquest of Ireland was begun in the reign of Henry II., in 1169. This king allowed a number of Norman adventurers to seize portions of the country and to hold them as fiefs of the English crown. The descendants of these Norman chieftains and of their followers were largely merged in the Celtic population. The Anglo-Norman element before long was arrayed, along with the native Irish, in opposition to the English crown, and for a time the authority of the English kings did not extend beyond a small so-called Pale. At length, at the close of the fifteenth century, Henry VII. succeeded in repressing the power of the Anglo-Irish lords, and the Irish parliament was made dependent upon the English crown. In 1542 Henry VIII. assumed the title of King of Ireland. There were two great insurrections in the reign of Elizabeth, at whose close Ireland was completely subdued. James I. settled large numbers of English and Scotch in Ulster. There was a great revolt in 1641–52, which was suppressed by Cromwell. There was a rebellion in favor of James II. in 1689–91, and an unsuccessful uprising took place in 1798. In 1801 the parliamentary union of Ireland with Great Britain was consummated. In 1829 the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act was passed. In 1846 the Irish repeal agitation under Daniel O'Connell was at its height, and in 1848 an insurrection took place, but was speedily suppressed. Gladstone's first Land Act was passed in 1870 and the second in 1881. For the last 35 years a vigorous movement for Home Rule has been carried on.
